Dread Elves

Originally a Highborn colony, the elven Republic of Dathen was founded long ago after a bloody rebellion. Out of this grim conflict was born the spirit of a people who restlessly seek superiority over all others, setting out to tame the twin frontiers of their large Silexian continent and the world's oceans. These Daeb continue to vie with the Highborn for mastery of the waves. But for all the prosperity they've gained from Dathen's natural riches – cultivated by armies of slaves – and from plundering the peoples of every shore, the dread elves have never grown complacent or content. The result is an elven war machine ready to challenge and subdue the entire world.

Daeb raiding ships are known to attack shores around the world in swift and terrifying raids.

The nation of the Dread Elves is the Republic of Dathen, settled in ancient times by pioneers and refugees.

Species: Elves

Though mortal, elves can live many hundreds of years, giving their lives and societies an entirely different character to that of most sapient species. Tall with pointed ears, they appear similar to humans and yet possess an entirely fey quality that immediately sets them apart. Elves are known for pride and elitism, valuing a form of nobility and elegance that provokes an instinctive fear in other species – which they often view as little better than animals.

Rebellion

The elven civil war was one of the cataclysmic events that signalled the end of the Golden Age and the coming of the Ages of Ruin. When their lands in the eastern hemisphere were overrun by enemies, the elves fled west, but instead of being welcomed to the home islands of Celeda Ablan, they were forced to settle the harsh, untamed continent of Silexia. Rapidly developing a hardy frontier spirit, it was only a matter of time before the colonists refused to bend the knee, and the war that followed saw the origins of Daeb martial greatness. To this day, Daeb armies are often called “Silexian” after the first regiments formed prior to the war. Despite millennia of independence, dread elves still follow the same pantheon of gods as their sylvan and highborn predecessors, albeit with greater or lesser importance attached to each deity, and names that reflect their own language. Caedhren the Hunter, Yema the Enticer and Nabh the War Crow command the most powerful temples. Dathen is a highly religious nation, and its priests have gradually taken on the role of wizards, since the great institutions of magical scholarship on the White Isles were lost to it following the rebellion.

The Obsidian Thrones

Today, Dathen controls the entire eastern seaboard of the Silexian continent. It is ruled by a body of ninety-nine senators and three Crimson Consuls who occupy the seats of symbolic power known as the Obsidian Thrones, in the dread tower of Gar Daecos. These positions are elected, but only by wealthy elves owning sufficient land, ships, or slaves. Three parties are dominant in Daeb politics: the Fatherland faction, who seek to eventually regain the elves’ original lands in Vetia; the Motherland faction, who foster the old enmity with the Highborn, dreaming of one day conquering the White Isles; and the Slavers, who see no need to leave Silexia, aiming instead for economic and military success across the globe.

Raiding and Slaving

All around the world, people know to fear the approach of Daeb vessels. They’re crewed by brutal naval warriors with decades of experience of launching coastal assaults designed to plunder both material wealth and members of any species that can be used as slaves. Other sapient creatures have little moral value in the eyes of the elves, who use a vast force of enslaved labour to till their expansive fields and build their cities and boats. Maritime raiding thus attracts both nobles and commoners as a means to gain riches and reputation.

Military Training

Besides privately tutored nobles, all able-bodied Daeb are expected to attend one of the famed military academies of Dathen. Here they learn battle prowess from uncompromising masters, competing to graduate and earn their spear, which symbolises full Daeb citizenship. Those lesser citizens who complete their training without meeting the Academy’s full standards can still support the Republic’s armies with ranged weapons and other services, but they will never be considered true Daeb. This pitiless system has forged a nation of elves instantly able to form armies and fight as one, trained with peerless discipline and battle strategy. It also creates bonds of fellowship among those who have endured an academy education side by side. Daeb armies are composed of paid professionals, unbound by state or feudal obligations, making all its warriors highly motivated.

The Menagerie

In their endless determination to prove themselves and stamp their dominion over all other beings, dread elves have developed a substantial culture of hunting, seeking to tame and exploit the most fearsome beasts of their homeland and its seas. These creatures are caged in taming schools almost as prestigious as the academies, where handlers deploy specialised methods to “educate” even the largest monsters, sometimes using little more than the strength of their own will. The beasts can then travel to zoos and fighting arenas where they provide entertainment and fascination; but they can also be trained to fight alongside Dathen’s soldiers, with devastating effect.

Army Model Rules

Characters (Max. 40 %)

Scions of the patrician class, these terrifying and inspiring nobles have an iron will forged on a hundred battlefields, and a mastery of combat techniques born of private tuition. Some deign to contribute their expertise as leaders of Dathen's academies or taming schools. But whether an independent adventurer or a marshal of the Obsidian Thrones, they will prosecute the destiny of the Republic or die in the attempt.

Academy Commander: The model part gains Academy.

Model parts with Academy in the model's unit gain Artistry of Death.

Beastmaster: The model part gains Slaver.

Apply the following effects to units within range of this model's Commanding Presence (friend or foe):

- Friendly units containing Beast: Courage Tests gain Minimised.
- Friendly units: rolls for the number of hits from Stomp Attack gain Maximised.
- Enemy units: rolls for the number of hits from Stomp Attack gain Minimised.

The Republic's hosts are managed by a warrior elite, many rising from the ranks by virtue of personal merit and an eye for strategy. The nobility might rule by custom, but officer graduates command the unshakeable personal loyalty of soldiers who forged bonds with them at the academy and on the battlefield.

To a people defined by the need for domination and greatness, sacred rites and spells are simply another weapon, and so the leaders of Dathen's temples – warrior-priests trained in weaponcraft and spellcraft alike – are expected to join its armies in battle. These death-dealing chaplains inspire and exhort soldiers even as they bless them.

Twice-forsaken, the warlocks of Silexia are mistrusted masters of the mystic arts, many persecuted by both the Highborn and Dread nations. They have often joined with Daeb exiles to enrich their shadowy power and form outlaw communities beyond Dathen's borders. In rare cases, however, they can be ritually integrated into the Republic's systems of power, earning the right to assist or even lead military ventures with their remarkable arcane talents.

Anyone can murder for political gain, but these knives in the dark transcend such self-serving methods of death dealing. Taken by Caedhren's cult at birth, they're trained to know only deception and murder, and forget even their own names. Among the world's deadliest agents, they serve only the gods and the Republic.

Character Mounts

From ancient elven stock interbred with the wild herds of Silexia, the mounts of the Daeb are fleet as the wind. Their slight build makes most of them poor bearers of reinforced harness, but in light gear they're ideal for racing over the prairie, and they can also be trained to endure long shipments across the oceans.

The ultimate predator, perfectly adapted to hunting and bloodshed in any environment, raptors are the only examples of the magna sauria who have spread beyond the continent of Virentia. Dread elves greatly admire their elegant yet lethal reptilian forms, and have succeeded in cultivating their own breeds from eggs stolen around the world.

Dread Knights are exclusively composed of nobles and aristocrats – the role is proscribed by law according to exacting criteria, ensuring that only the deadliest riders take up the mantle. Their highly prized raptors make ideal mounts for the Daeb, matching their aggressive and spiteful temperament, and can be kept fed on a diet of dead slaves and enemies.

Veteran soldiers are secretly evaluated and, if deemed worthy, offered a chance to join the legendary Obsidian Guard, mailed fist of the Crimson Consuls. All ties are cut; their old life ends, and a new one of ceaseless training and unflinching dedication begins. The resulting warriors are considered the pinnacle of elven prowess, both by their comrades and their enemies.

Swarms of humanoid, vulture-like beasts herald the arrival of Daethen's fleets and armies, feeding on corpses of the slain or ripping apart those they catch off-guard. There are many variant species of harpy, all thought to be the product of ancient experiments. They possess animal intelligence, and are treated much like hunting hounds by their Daeb masters.

The Daeb value elven lives highly, so it's rare for them to offer up their mind and body in the sacrifice needed to create a gorgon. In these eldritch, forbidden rituals devised by the followers of Yema, the supplicant fuses with a supernal of the elven gods, at once blessed and cursed with serpentine forms and a petrifying gaze. Such beings are respected for their power and divinity, despite illicit origins.

Altar of Nabh: The model gains Attached, Exclusive (Height 1), Frenzy, Fury, Unruly, and War Platform. Model parts with Elf in friendly units within 12" of the Altar of Nabh gain Fury.

Altar of Tila: The model's Charge Speed and Mobility are always 0".

In addition, it gains Channel (2), Emplacement, Fearless, Solitary, Stubborn, and Unstable.

When another friendly unit within 18" of the model suffers one or more HP losses from an enemy attack, the Altar of Tila may cause three hits with Str 4, AP 2, and Unmodifiable onto the enemy unit that caused those losses. This effect can only be used once per phase.

Altar of Yema: The model gains Attached, Exclusive (Height 1), War Platform, and a single 'Attendant' model part gains Petrifying Stare.

Whenever a friendly unit within 12" of the Altar of Yema initiates any kind of move (see the 'Definition and Terminology' chapter in the Reference Handbook), the unit gains +1 Mobility and Devastating Charge (Strider), with Duration: End of Turn.

Beastmasters deploy harpoons from swift-moving chariots to ensnare, entangle and ultimately capture great beasts for taming and for the arenas. When fighting against enemy monsters, these lighter instruments of abduction can become weapons of war.

Daeb artillery is adapted to their tactics: rapid manoeuvres over challenging terrain, or nearly silent naval ambushes emerging from fog at close range with a sudden and overwhelming onslaught. As such, they favour mobile ballistas with a high rate of fire, and are prepared to sacrifice range to achieve it.

The Menagerie (Max. 30 %)

The mightiest of sea beasts, these amphibious tentacled behemoths use tidal shifts and chameleonic hides to hunt in coastal waters around the Shattered Sea and the Great Ocean. They're prized by Daeb beastmasters and admirals not simply for their magnificence and strength, but their ability to emerge from the waves in a sudden, close-quarters assault upon their foes.
