Highborn Elves

Beautiful, cultured, heavily armed, and ruthless, the elves of the White Isles represent the only great empire to have survived from the Golden Age. Called “highborn” both for the towers they build and because they set themselves above all others, their ancient power encompasses the globe, answering a single queen on the islands of Celeda Ablan. With colonies on many shores, the might of this Arandai Empire is safeguarded by unassailable naval superiority. When its glittering armies are sent forth, there are few that can stand against this august maritime juggernaut.

For millennia, Highborn Elves have used great fleets to exert control in lands around the world. From their homeland on Celeda Ablan to the farthest reaches of the Empire, the Arandai continue to influence world events on a grand scale.

Species: Elves

Though mortal, elves can live many hundreds of years, giving their lives and societies an entirely different character to that of most sapient species. Tall with pointed ears, they appear similar to humans and yet possess an entirely fey quality that immediately sets them apart. Elves are known for pride and elitism, valuing a form of nobility and elegance that provokes an instinctive fear in other species – which they often view as little better than animals.

Celeda Ablan

Legends claim that Celeda Ablan, called the White Isles for their remarkable cliffs, were originally settled by the first elves ever to build ships and explore the oceans. Today, the islands comprise distinct regions with their own culture and history, and the magnificent capital city of Aldan, where lies the Pearl Throne with its White Queen. On the largest island, beyond the rich and fertile southern region, three provinces are most famous. Ê'Baleg, in the north, is known for rainy, windswept highland lakes and glens, and a small population of fierce and hardy elves. In the west is Erlë, with its green fields and woods, known for the most traditional and old-fashioned elements of Arandai culture. And in the centre is Rymâ, with its haughty aristocrats and a spine of mythic mountains where dragons dwell.

Rulers of the Waves

The pride of the Arandai is the Royal Navy, the largest and most powerful fleet of ocean-going vessels in the world. Highborn territories are not as extensive as they once were, but they remain a source of enormous wealth and strategic advantage. Most Arandai soldiers have experience fighting at sea, guarding coastal fortifications, and launching marine invasions. This facilitates the operations of the Empire's many mercantile concerns, bringing both luxuries and more esoteric treasures to the homeland. A notable example is the camilla plant, only grown in distant lands, which can be used to brew a calming beverage extremely popular in the White Isles.

Rulers of Wind and Fire

The Highborn have long cultivated an affinity with any animal they consider sufficiently powerful and noble to reflect their own nature. Most beloved of all are those that can fly, especially if they can bear elves aloft with them. Not only do elves fight alongside gigantic birds and airborne creatures, but they also seek out and master rare, magical beasts, including giant emperor phoenixes from remote volcanic islands; even the mightiest dragons have developed a special affinity. Such fiery allies have granted many Arandai armies the ability to immolate their enemies from above.

Training and Scholarship

Over several millennia, the Arandai have perfected a precise and implacable military machine, developing elite weapons and fighting styles. Highborn armies boast formidable discipline and train with many advanced manoeuvres, thanks to mandatory military education at a young age, followed by rotating periods of military service for the rest of an elf's life. Despite their obsession with refinement, aesthetics and civilised manners, the Highborn are still the same predators from primordial forests, and their lust for victory has never dimmed. The wizards of Celeda Ablan, meanwhile, are trained in the world's most prestigious universities: the bright halls of Asfada and the revered towers of Canrac. Here, thanks to the gathered lore of several millennia of research, they have reached heights of spellcraft of which most can only dream.

Honours

Through their long lives, elves pursue many interests, but to obtain one of the Honours awarded by the Queen herself is to be acclaimed across the Empire as an individual of particular excellence. Those who achieve such status are exemplars of dedication and mastery all Arandai admire. Most of these renowned awards are tied to one of the Highborn's many aristocratic orders.

The spells are gained starting from the first spell of the Path, progressing towards the last spell of the Path. This does not change the bearer's chosen Magic Path. Note: by doing so, it is possible that a single Wizard gain the same spell twice – yet they still won't be able to cast that same spell multiple times (for example, a Death Cult Hierarch with Wizard Adept and Soul Conduit that selected spells #1 and #3 from Divination and swapped to Duty is Eternal during Battle Setup selects Evocation with Scroll of the Free Mind: they now know Whispers of the Veil twice, as well as Danse Macabre, and Duty is Eternal).
Scroll of Power	30 pts

Hereditary Spell

Meladys, the Grand Mistress, is the goddess of secrets, curiosity and wanderlust. Through knowledge gained from this enigmatic patron, the wizards of the Arandai can employ their arcane powers to cheat death and change destiny. Many a foe has thought themselves victorious only for reality itself to shift after the fact, erasing injuries at the mage's discretion.

Hereditary Spell

Favour of Meladys

CV	Type	Duration
10+	Caster	One Turn

Effect

The target gains two Protection Tokens, which are removed when the spell ends. When a friendly unit within 18" of the target suffers a wound, after Armour Saves have been taken, but before any Special Saves are taken, the target may discard a Protection Token and ignore the wound applying the following rules:

- Rank-and-File models of Height 1 ignore up to two wounds per token (provided they are suffered simultaneously).
- Characters, and models of Height 4 or 5, can each only ignore a single wound per phase.
- Wounds from attacks with Multiple Wounds are not ignored: they inflict one less wound instead.

Thousands of years of careful selection from across the four corners of the world have resulted in steeds with the qualities most appreciated by elves. While they're not known for raw strength, no other horse can match their speed.

Since before the dawn of history, elves have shared a rare friendship with the most powerful birds of prey. When the ancestors of the Arandai first left the forest, they were followed by their avian allies. To this day, eagles and elves fight side by side, and the deadliness of these aerial predators has not waned over the millennia.

Raised in the wild and later captured and trained, they can become vicious whirlwinds of wing, talon and beak, capable of shredding any who dare to stand against them.

Often used as scouts, they can strike at enemy lines of communication, pester opposing troops, and cause havoc wherever they're deployed.

The Sea Guard Corps is the standing army of the Empire, directly loyal to the throne. It's tasked with manning the ships of the Royal Navy, garrisoning local fortresses, and protecting far flung outposts. Drilled in the use of spear and bow beyond their levied kin, these soldiers form the first line of defence of the White Isles and its colonies.

The most rustic of all the vassals of the White Queen, the scions of the swaying grasslands of Erlë are horsemasters and outriders, called reavers for their role in ancient conflicts. Employed by commanders across the length and breadth of the Empire, their speed and manoeuvrability have been instrumental in winning countless campaigns.

The most famous of all the soldiers of Celeda Ablan are those of the Order of the Sword Masters, also known as Paladins of Nab. They are warrior aesthetes par excellence, sometimes dubbed “blade poets” and “painters in red”. Once shunned for embracing the “beauty” of the War Crow, a goddess beloved of dread elves, they’re now a common sight in many armies.

Air, water and fire are the sacred elements of the Arandai. Each has its own servants, with Flame Wardens charged as guardians of the latter. To ride a chariot of Dyaran's cult is a sign of tremendous prestige among the Lion Guard and the nobles of Ê'Baleg. They're pulled by majestic predatory felines, which once roamed the White Isles but are now captured from overseas. The honour is even greater for those who can employ such a deadly union of warrior and beast in their service.

Model Rules

Rebirth: When the model loses its last Health Point, unless it is a Summoned model, the owner must roll a D6. On a 5+, it is a success — apply the following effects:

- Before removing the model as a casualty, mark the centre of its final position.
- At the start of the next friendly Movement Phase, Summon a new Phoenix within 3" of the marked point. The Summoned model has the same upgrades as the original Phoenix.

Immediately after being Deployed, the model loses 4 Health Points, which cannot be prevented nor Recovered in any way.

If the roll is failed, the model is removed as a casualty as normal.

Optional Model Rules

Fire Phoenix: The Phoenix model part gains Flaming Attacks, Grind Attack (D6 hits, Str 4, AP 1, Flaming Attacks, Unmodifiable), and Sweeping Attack ((XD3*)+1 hits, Str 4, AP 1, Flaming Attacks).

* 'X' is the number of Ranks in the target unit.

Frost Phoenix: The model gains Afflict (-2 Def, -2 Off, and -2 Agi), Fearless, Magical Attacks, and Supernal.

Warden's Bond: The model gains +1 Discipline, Disciplined, and passes its Rebirth roll on 3+ instead of 5+.
