Infernal Dwarves

Long ago, in the Age of Thunder, the dwarven prophet Vezodinezh activated the great machinery known as the Device. Designed to draw on the raw magic of the Immortal Realm, the machine exploded, rending the very Veil and obliterating a large section of the Augean continent in an instant, leaving nothing but a terrible crater forever known as the Inferno. Born from this cataclysm, the Infernal dwarves have proven themselves the unyielding masters of their own destiny, subduing their many enemies with the power of their industry, gods, and vast labourforce of slaves. This is a people marked by a flame that they refuse to let die, for their brand is the symbol of their pride and invincibility.

The Infernal Dwarves hold the desolate Blasted Plain in an iron grip – though their citadels are not united into a single nation. They also control many surrounding vassal states, as well as trading or mining colonies in far away lands.

Species: Dwarves

Short in stature but tall in self-esteem, dwarves are a robust and stubborn species. They value proper order and have a highly developed sense of justice, taking insults and grievances very seriously. Often seeking wealth in the form of precious stones and metals, dwarves form tight-knit communities, usually organised around industry and military defence, yearning to prove their greatness and indomitability to the world.

The Blasted Plain

Even before the Inferno, the eastern dwarves tried many desperate measures to defend themselves during the Ages of Ruin, the result of which left their homeland as an infertile desert known as the Blasted Plain. Gaining a reputation as cruel fire-worshippers ever since they took the Infernal brand, today's Infernal dwarves defend this inhospitable land from within mighty citadels ruled by powerful overlords – building tall ziggurats in stark contrast to the underground Holds of their western cousins. Though they are no united nation, the Infernal citadels are at least joined by a common religion and a common purpose to stand against any invaders. In the far north of the Plain still lies the Inferno, surrounded by a region of lethally high magic. Beyond it stretches only the equally tainted Wasteland, created when the Device first pierced the Veil – a disaster for which other peoples still hold the Infernals responsible. Though life cannot survive near the Inferno itself, still many dwarves brave the journey to seek the power of the magic-enriched lava and the creatures that cross through it into the Mortal Realm.

Slavery and Vassals

Those who have the misfortune to live in or near the Blasted Plain – whether human, ogre, orc or otherwise – eventually find themselves subjugated by the dwarves and forced to pay tribute in gold and flesh. The luckier vassals are merely used to swell the ranks of Infernal armies with conscripted levies; the unlucky are taken as slaves and made to work in the mines or citadels as expendable labour. Some are even spent in battle as cannon fodder, for access to fresh slaves is rarely a problem: the Infernals supplement what they take by conquest with what they buy from Dread Elves, Vermin and other sources.

Industry and Technology

Combining science and dark magic, the Infernal dwarves build machines of spectacular size and quality for both industry and war. In this way they can strip wealth from a barren land, and facilitate trade with new forms of transport – not just caravans and ships, but even engines on tracks, the first of their kind in the world, including the great Steel Road to the East.

Gods and Priests

There are four great Gods of the Flame, collectively called the Vaneb: Ashuruk, the god of rulers and law-givers, Nezibkesh, the earthshaking god of mining and destruction, Shamut, bull god of vengeance and war, and finally Lugar, trickster god of legal manipulation. Each of the four is worshipped in dedicated temples within every citadel, controlled by ruthless mage-priests with the power to appoint the local overlord.

Infernal Brand

When they come of age, Infernal dwarves sear their flesh with the image of a stylised flame as a symbol of the Inferno and a commitment to its legacy: a cause for which they will fight to the last breath. This is not just a mark of identity, but of citizenship as well – those without it must obey branded dwarves if they value their lives.

The Law

No people is more litigious than the Infernal dwarves, ever since their legal system was codified by the hero-king Kemurab. The role of police officers and detectives is normally reserved for the intimidating taurukh: dwarves fused with bulls in a dangerous occult ritual. Lawyers are held in equally high esteem – with the exception of those pledged to Lugar, who are known as such cunning masters of the law that they could sell your own house back to you. Lugar's greatest disciples have even managed to create pacts capable of binding the mighty kadim: supernal magma-elementals which dwell near the Inferno.

Army Model Rules

Incendiary – Cumulative

Give one Incendiary Marker to the unit, with Duration: Permanent.

A unit containing one or more Incendiary Markers gains Weakness (Flaming Attacks).

Remove one Incendiary Marker:

- Immediately when the unit suffers one or more wounds (before saves are performed) from Ranged Attacks with Flaming Attacks.
- At the end of a Round of Combat in which the unit has suffered one or more wounds (before saves are performed) from Melee Attacks with Flaming Attacks.

A Character leaving a unit affected by one or more Incendiary Markers is no longer affected, unless the Character was a single model unit when it gained Incendiary Markers: in that case, the Character keeps those Incendiary Markers.

Fire is the preferred weapon of Infernal armies; not only does it destroy enemies but it also glorifies the Vaneb and confirms the greatness of those pledged to the Inferno. The dwarves frequently send their vassals to coat their opponents in pitch and other violently combustible substances, the better to make the unfortunate targets burn when battle is joined.

Infernal Armour – Armour Equipment

The model gains Resistance (Flaming Attacks).

The bearer gains the same number of spells from a single other Path available to them during list creation. The spells are gained starting from the first spell of the Path, progressing towards the last spell of the Path.

This does not change the bearer's chosen Magic Path.

Note: by doing so, it is possible that a single Wizard gain the same spell twice – yet they still won't be able to cast that same spell multiple times (for example, a Death Cult Hierarch with Wizard Adept and Soul Conduit that selected spells #1 and #3 from Divination and swapped to Duty is Eternal during Battle Setup selects Evocation with Scroll of the Free Mind: they now know Whispers of the Veil twice, as well as Danse Macabre, and Duty is Eternal).

Thrones have been important symbols to dwarves of all kinds ever since the days of the ancient empire. Today, while most overlords seek to project a more vigorous attitude in battle, other Infernal grandees still sometimes go to war seated. The governors of vassal provinces are particularly fond of demonstrating their power this way, carried on the backs of their minions.

Uncomfortable with raising and training war beasts, Infernal dwarves have never mastered conventional cavalry or chariotry. God of violence, Shamut is usually depicted with the head of a bull. His clergy has perfected great public rituals, involving copious bloodshed, that are sometimes successful in gaining the god's favour, summoning a supernal avatar. Appearing as enormous winged bulls, their hooves and horns wreathed in fire, these beasts permit particularly worthy supplicants as riders.

In other lands, warrior-aristocracies might form a knightly class. In the Blasted Plain, every dwarf forms the warrior class, and every dwarf learns to fight. The flame-proof armour they receive, together with the brand that symbolises the Inferno, are core components of identity: to be an Infernal dwarf is to have been an Infernal warrior.
