Sylvan Elves

There are many woods where one can enjoy a pleasant stroll. But in some forests and jungles, especially the largest and oldest, the unwary traveller may encounter strange sights, troubling thoughts, and the sense of watchful eyes. Some may even meet a grimmer fate: speeding arrows or grasping vines the last thing they ever see. Many tales are told of those lost to the mysterious woodland fey, but few know the whole truth: a great kingdom of capricious and merciless elves that has fiercely preserved its woodland domains since the very dawn of time. These Sylvan realms are capable of raising terrifying hosts of walking trees, vicious archers and all manner of lethal weapons, magics and creatures – armies used not just to defend the forest against any intruder but also to sally into the wider world with devastating ferocity when the mood strikes.

The kingdom of Wyscan is the ancestral home of the Sylvan Elves and their forest spirit allies. From here elves defend their arboreal home and the Wild Hunt sets forth upon each Midsummer Eve.

Scattered from pole to pole any thicket, grove or woodland could hide a Trewi settlement or a copse of living trees. Yet so secretive are these denizens that the first sign of one's transgression upon their lands may be arrows whistling at trespassers from the shadows or roots grasping the unwary.

Species: Elves

Though mortal, elves can live many hundreds of years, giving their lives and societies an entirely different character to that of most sapient species. Tall with pointed ears, they appear similar to humans and yet possess an entirely fey quality that immediately sets them apart. Elves are known for pride and elitism, valuing a form of nobility and elegance that provokes an instinctive fear in other species – which they often view as little better than animals.

Children of the Gods

Sylvan elves – the Trewi – live in many parts of the world, but their first and greatest stronghold is the forest of Wyscan. In the heart of these ancient woods is a bower that serves as the abode of the Forest King and Queen, Cadaron and Amryl, supernal offspring of the elven pantheon. This makes the Trewi the only people in the world ruled directly by divine figures. Theirs is a changeless monarchy, one that has existed unaltered for as long as memory can tell – long before the other elven peoples left the forest and built new kinds of societies. The Kingdom of Wyscan stretches far beyond that one forest – Sylvans across the world swear allegiance to its monarchs. Small numbers of elves are able to travel between each forest using the magic of mistwalking, preserving a single worldwide culture – though each domain has its own unique branches from the primary trunk. Many cultures and kingdoms tell stories of inexplicable mists spreading from the woods that leave corpses or vanished children behind them.

Forest Guardians

Able to move among dense trees as effortlessly as a clear meadow, Sylvans are very territorial, and have long learned how to defend their homes – constantly patrolling, watching the borders, and always ready to muster larger forces when needed. In addition to the soldiers that each Trewi noble keeps ready, there are several semi-religious orders of elves dedicated to combat and violence. Thanks to the elves' deep respect for the natural world, many forest beasts have been tamed or are willing to support such forces in battle. While most Sylvan warriors are adept with spear or glaive, the Trewi's greatest asset is their skill in archery. Long considered a holy weapon, the bow allows woodland elves to hunt their foe while remaining unseen; they grudge outsiders even a glimpse of their sacred realm. Capable of crafting perhaps the world's most perfect bows, all who dwell in the forest learn how to shoot, and many are more skilled than the greatest marksmen of other species.

Tree Spirits

Various otherworldly supernal beings and spirits dwell in the most mysterious places of the world. Many of these have developed an affinity for particular forms of matter, becoming elementals. But the creatures most closely allied with the Trewi are those who long ago bonded permanently with the trees themselves, becoming mortal yet magical: walking arboreal spirits of tremendous strength. Not all such beings are friendly, even to Sylvans, but most tree spirits share a deep connection to the forest with their elven neighbours, and over time a form of symbiosis has grown up between them. Both can be willful and cruel, nurturing and changeable. Together, they can shift and call the forest itself, guiding even non-sentient trees to cover their movements, or to form shapes to suit the needs of their settlement groves.

Army Specific Rules

The Forest Follows

During Pre-game Selections, you may place a single Forest on the Battlefield, so that it is not inside either Deployment Zone and not in contact with any other Terrain Feature. This Forest has the dimensions of a 10"×6" rectangle. In addition to the normal Forest rules, it is Dangerous Terrain (6+) instead of any other instance of Dangerous Terrain, and can never be chosen for Primary or Secondary Objectives.

Army Model Rules

Elven Cloak – Armour Equipment

For Shooting Attacks allocated against a Health Pool with Elven Cloak a to-hit roll of '1', '2', or '3' is always considered a miss, instead of the usual '1'.

Forest Dweller

If a unit entirely with Forest Dweller is within 3" of a Forest, it benefits from Stubborn. In addition, if the unit already contains Stubborn, the unit is considered Steady when rolling Break Tests.

Tree Singing

Once in your Magic Phase, immediately after Excess Magic, a single model with Tree Singing can move a Forest following the steps below. The owner may discard a Magic Dice to increase the range to the distances written in square brackets [X"].

1. Choose a Forest not in contact with any unit and within 8" [24"] of a friendly model with Tree Singing.
2. Move this Forest in a straight line up to 4" [12"], or until just before moving into contact with any unit or Terrain Feature.

Attack Attributes

Forest's Thorns – Attack Attribute – Shooting

The attack's AP is set to at least 3. This can only be used with a Sylvan Bow.

Weapons

Impaling Roots – Shooting Weapon

Name	Aim	Range	Shots	Str	AP	Attack Attributes
Impaling Roots	3+	12"	D6+1	4[5]	1[2]	Gnarled and Knotted, ignores to-hit modifiers from Cover, March and Shoot, Quick to Fire

Gnarled and Knotted

If the target is within 3" of a Forest, use the Strength and Armour Penetration values in brackets.

Sylvan Blades – Melee Weapon

Paired Weapons, +1 AP.

Sylvan Bow – Shooting Weapon

Name	Aim	Range	Shots	Str	AP	Attack Attributes
Sylvan Bow	X+	30"	1	4	1	Quick to Fire

Kindreds

Certain Trewi nobles show a natural affinity for one of the many traditions or talents practised by the Sylvan orders. Some have trained within these groups, putting aside their leadership for a span of their long lives. Others are related by blood to the practitioners, but all feel a spiritual connection to their sacred art.

Creatures of twilight and primal lore, druids are expert spell weavers. Their powers stem not from a regimented study of the mystical arts, but from a deeper connection with the forest. Though not all follow the Path of Druidism, their spells confound the enemy and embolden their allies by tapping the secrets and the strength of the trees.

Elder dryads have seen acorns grow into the tallest trees. They're related to more lithe and fast-growing arboreal species than most treefathers, but can be deadly and mercurial in their own fashion. Their affinity for magic also connects them to younger Sylvan spirits of their own kind through a singular root network.

The rarest and oldest tree spirits can remember a time before they were imprisoned in mortal form. Maddened by an endless quest for lost freedom, kin and habitat, they've become the wrath of nature incarnate, more restless and warlike than any other tree spirit. Gargantuan, unstoppable juggernauts of wood, vines and roots, avatars hold the memories of entire forests.

While most thicket beasts are all but mindless, acting upon base anger and hungers, those few with intellects intact often seek to guide the instincts of their wilder siblings, acting as stewards of the darker woods. Dragons are the most revered of forest hunters. Known for pride, they possess unfathomable minds and ambiguous motives, selecting alliances with riders they deem worthy. Those dragons which dwell in a forest often become attuned to its soul, able to call to the very trees. Core (Min. 25 %)

Trewi are not always known to fight in dense formations of warriors, but they understand the need for stalwart braves when the time for battle comes. As such, the Forest Guard acts as a standing military force, often serving as the retinue of local lords.

While some prefer the sword or spear, most elves' first love is the bow. Even the youngest Trewi warrior is a farsighted hunter, and incursions can often be ended with a swift volley the moment the enemy steps into the forest. Trewi bowcraft is equally accomplished; these are powerful weapons wielded by archers of frightening skill.

These forest spirits embody the fickle nature of the seasons, for their shape is not fixed as it is for mortals. Forest spirits whose arboreal vessels have been lost, these beasts inhabit nearby vegetation, becoming moving masses of briar and bramble. Often preying on those who wander too close to the forest edge, they can be docile until roused to anger, displaying great hatred for interlopers.
