

3.1.4.1

THE IX AGE

FANTASY BATTLES

Season Pack 2:

Legends of the 9th Age

Contents

Season 2: Legends of the 9th Age	3
1 Recommended Army Size and Battlefield Size	4
2 Selecting Terrain Map and Deployment Types	5
3 Determining Primary and Secondary Objectives	5
4 Deployment Types	6
5 Primary Objectives	8
5.A Trophies of War	8
5.B Divide and Conquer	8
5.C Breakthrough	8
5.D Secure Targets	8
5.E Hold the Centre	8
5.F Skull of Harald Redstub	8
6 Secondary Objectives	9
6.A Settle the Score	9
6.B Demonstrate Superiority	9
6.C Slay the Beast	9
6.D Assassinate	9
6.E Capture their Banners	9
6.F Conserve our Numbers	9
7 Terrain Feature Dimensions	10
8 Battlefields of Vetia	10
8.A Gewach River	10
8.B Last Beacon	11
8.C Outskirts of Ullsberg	11
8.D Bog of Beasts	12
8.E The Maidens	12
8.F Wyscan Forest	13
8.G Barren Mountains	13
8.H Crimson Peaks	14
9 Battlefields of Taphria	15
9.A Dogoko Savannah	15
9.B Nsisiboko Jungle	15
9.C Amharaq Oases	16
9.D Kegiz Gavem Highlands	16

9.E	Al-Hisin Outskirts	17
9.F	Mountains of Gold	17
9.G	Napaat River Delta	18
9.H	Celed Rymain	18

Legendary Characters 19

1	Legendary Characters Introduction	19
2	Prologue	20
3	Beast Herds	21
4	Daemon Legions	26
5	Dread Elves	32
6	Dwarven Holds	37
7	Empire of Sonnstahl	42
8	Highborn Elves	47
9	Infernal Dwarves	52
10	Kingdom of Equitaine	57
11	Ogre Khans	62
12	Orcs and Goblins	67
13	Saurian Ancients	74
14	Sylvan Elves	79
15	Undying Dynasties	84
16	Vampire Covenant	89
17	Vermin Swarm	94
18	Warriors of the Dark Gods	99
19	Epilogue	104

SEASON 2: LEGENDS OF THE 9TH AGE

Welcome to Legends of the 9th Age, the second season of the 3rd Edition, and a celebration of the decade of T9A we have behind us. This season is a tribute to the spectacular individuals who have shaped the world of the Ninth Age, and with the rules in this document you can bring them onto the battlefield under your command.

Inside the Legends of the 9th Age, you'll find:

- 33 Legendary Characters, each with their own backstory (related by Ludovico della Scafa, an Arcalean historian hired by the Iron Crown Captain Andrea Barbiano Ludovico della Scafa) and the rules that enable you to field them into your games.
- 6 Deployment Types, of which 5 are reused from season 1.
- 6 Primary Objectives, of which 4 are reused from season 1.
- 6 Secondary Objectives, of which 4 are reused from season 1. This section also includes updated rules for selecting Secondary Objectives.
- 2*8 new Terrain Maps, divided into two sets; Battlefields of Vetia and Battlefields of Taphria. None reused from season 1. Vetia Maps are as varied and interesting as the countries of Vetia, whereas the Battlefields of Taphira are like the desserts of Taphira, where the exact placement of a battle does not matter nearly as much as the general leading it.
- We are reusing the best parts from season 1, both to ensure that liked rules are kept around, and to ensure the number of new things our players must learn is manageable.
- The different parts of this book, from Legendary Characters to Objectives and Terrain Maps, are designed to work together, and to be usable in a wide variety of battlefield settings. We recommend they are adopted in all types of games, from narrative campaigns, to tournament games, and everything in between.
- The T9A team invites you to battle for glory at the hands of legends! Will you rise to this challenge?

Recommended Army Size and Battlefield Size

Season Pack 2 is made to be played with a Field Army of 4000 points and on a 48"×72" Battlefield but can be played at both larger and smaller scale, instructions on how to adapt deployments will come in the full version.
Victory Points table for an Army Size of 4000 points.

VP difference	BP winner	BP defeated
0-200 VP	10	10
201-400 VP	11	9
401-800 VP	12	8
801-1200 VP	13	7
1201-1600 VP	14	6
1601-2000 VP	15	5
2001 VP more	16	4
Primary Objective	+3	-3
Each Completed Secondary Objective	+1	-1

Selecting Terrain Map and Deployment Types

In the absence of already chosen Deployment Types and/or Terrain Maps (e.g. due to players agreeing to play particular ones, or playing in a tournament where these are already set for each game), we recommend consulting the tables below:

Terrain Map table

Select either a fitting Battlefield of Vetia or randomise one of Taphrias more similar Battlefields.

1. Dogoko Savannah
2. Nsisiboko Jungle
3. Amharaq Oases
4. Kegiz Gavem Highlands
5. Al-Hisn Outskirts
6. Mountains of Gold
7. Napaat River Delta
8. Celed Rymain

Deployment Type table

Roll a single D6:

1. Frontline Clash
2. Bottleneck
3. Spearhead
4. Encircle
5. Refused Flank
6. Assault at First Light

Determining Primary and Secondary Objectives

If the Primary Objective and/or Secondary Objectives are not already determined (e.g. due to players agreeing to play particular ones, or playing in a tournament where these are already set for each game), we recommend consulting the lists below:

Primary Objective

Roll a D6 to determine which Primary Objective to play:

1. Trophies of War
2. Divide and Conquer
3. Breakthrough
4. Secure Targets
5. Hold the Centre
6. Skull of Harald Redstub

Random Selection of Secondary Objective

At the beginning of 'Determine Secondary Objectives' (Battle Preparations - 3.B) randomise three different Secondary Objectives from the list below.

During each players 'Pre-Game Selections' (Battle Preparations - 3.C and 3.D), they select one of the three previously determined Secondary Objectives.

The Attacker cannot select one the Defender has selected.

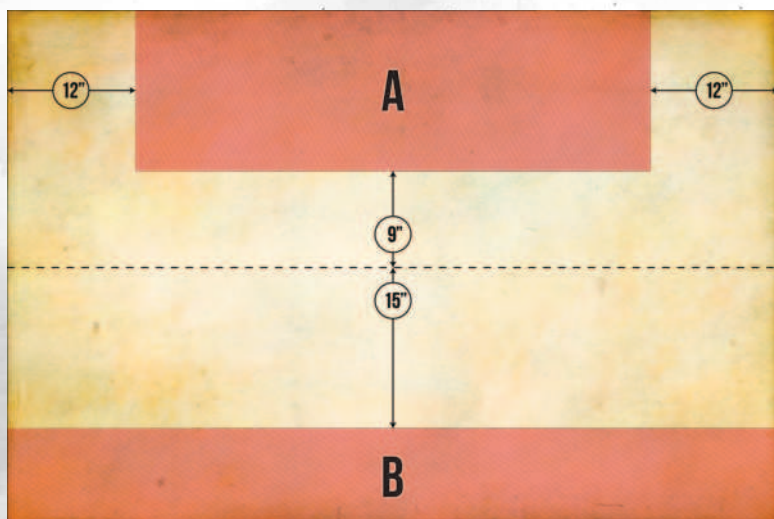

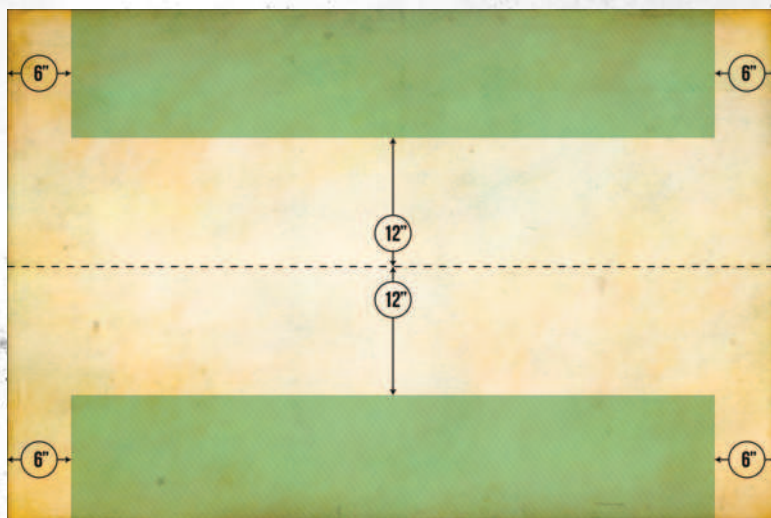

1. Settle the Score
2. Demonstrate Superiority
3. Slay the Beast
4. Assassinate
5. Capture their Banners
6. Conserve our Numbers

Deployment Types

Follow the rules in the Rulebook, except where those rules are overridden by the details under each Deployment Type. Unless mentioned otherwise, the 'Central Line' is the line drawn through the Battlefield Centre and parallel to the Long Battlefield Edges.

1. Frontline Clash

Deployment Zones are more than 12" away from the Central Line, and more than 6" from the Short Battlefield Edges.

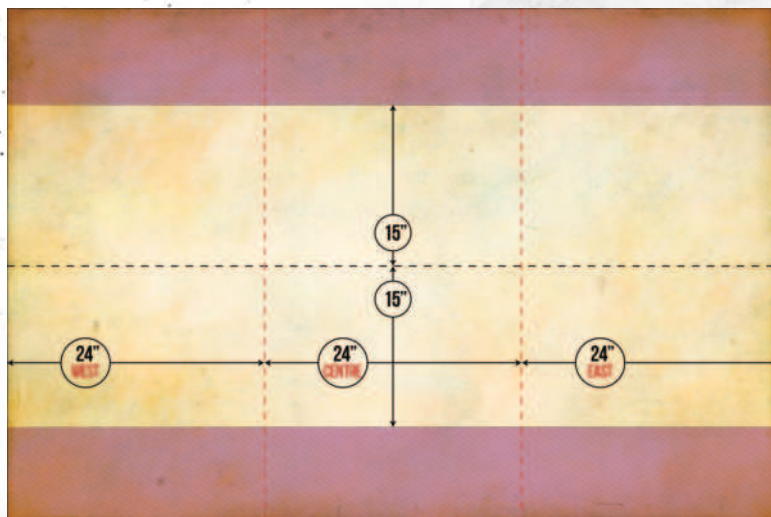

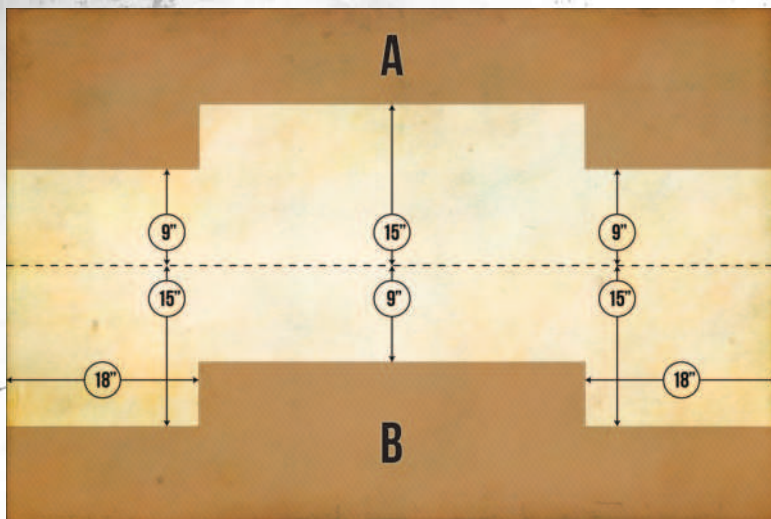

2. Bottleneck

Player A's Deployment Zone is more than 9" away from the Central Line, and more than 12" from the Short Battlefield Edges.
Player B's Deployment Zone is more than 15" away from the Central Line. The Defender also chooses if they are player A or player B.

3. Spearhead

Deployment Zones are more than 15" away from the Central Line. The table is divided along the Long Battlefield Edge into three equal areas ('west', 'centre', 'east'). The Defender chooses one of these thirds to be their 'Spearhead Area'. The Attacker then immediately chooses one of the remaining two thirds as their Spearhead Area. Units Deployed entirely within their Spearhead Area gain Vanguard (3" Mob).

4. Encircle

Each Deployment Zone alternates between 9" and 15" from the Central Line, as shown in the diagram. Along with selecting a side, the Defender selects one of the two Deployment Zones. The Attacker has the other Deployment Zone.

5. Refused Flank

Deployment Zones are more than 9" away from the Central Line (see diagram), which is the line drawn from one corner of the Battlefield to the opposite corner. The Defender chooses which corners to use.

6. Assault at First Light

After choosing a side, the Defender selects a Short Battlefield Edge; the Attacker has the opposite one. The Defender's Deployment Zone is more than 6" away from the Central Line, and 18" away from the Attacker's Short Battlefield Edge. The Attacker's Deployment Zone is instead more than 12" away from the Central Line, and 18" away from the Defender's Short Battlefield Edge.

Primary Objectives

If the players are tied for End of Game Objective Completion, neither player wins it.

5.A Trophies of War

'2.4 Determine and Setup Victory Conditions': none.

Rules: whenever an Enemy unit Engaged in Combat, including all Attached Models, is removed as a casualty, put a single Trophy Token on a single Friendly Scoring unit that was just Engaged with the removed unit.

A unit immediately loses all its Trophy Tokens if it loses Scoring.

End of Game Completion: the player with the most Trophy Tokens on their units wins.

If both players have no Tokens and one player also has no Scoring units remaining on the Battlefield, the other player wins.

5.B Divide and Conquer

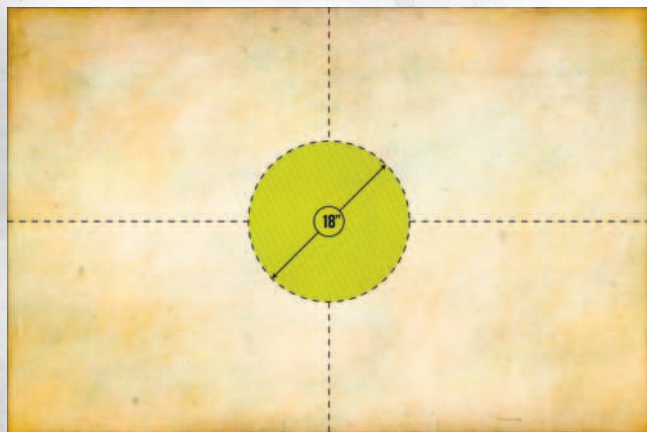

'2.4 Determine and Setup Victory Conditions': mark the Battlefield Centre and divide the Battlefield into quarters. (As shown in the diagram.)

Rules: END of Game Turns 3 to 6, a player gains a single Objective Counter if they have more quarters touching Friendly Scoring units than the opponent has.

Each unit can only touch a single quarter at a time, determined by the location of its Centre.

A unit with its Centre within 9" of the Battlefield Centre does not count as being in Contact with any quarter.

End of Game Completion: the player with the most Objective Counters wins.

5.C Breakthrough

'2.4 Determine and Setup Victory Conditions': mark all Scoring units on the opponent's Army List

Rules: none.

End of Game Completion: combine the number of:

1. marked Enemy units that were removed as a casualty whilst Engaged in Combat and
2. Friendly Scoring units in Contact with the Enemy's Deployment Zone.

The player with the highest total wins.

5.D Secure Targets

'2.4 Determine and Setup Victory Conditions': place two markers on opposite sides of the Battlefield, with their centres on the Central Line and 18"* from the Battlefield Centre.

Rules: END of Game Turns 3 to 6, a player gains a single Objective Counter if they control more markers than their opponent.

A marker is controlled if there are any Friendly Scoring units and no Enemy Scoring units within 6" of a marker.

End of Game Completion: the player with the most Objective Counters wins.

* For Battlefields of a larger or smaller size than the standard 72"x48", replace 18" with a distance equal to a quarter of the Long Battlefield Edge.

5.E Hold the Centre

'2.4 Determine and Setup Victory Conditions': mark the Battlefield Centre.

Rules: END of Game Turns 3 to 6, the player with the most Scoring units within 9" of the Battlefield Centre gains a single Objective Counter.

End of Game Completion: the player with the most Objective Counters wins.

5.F Skull of Harald Redstüb

'2.4 Determine and Setup Victory Conditions': place a marker on the Battlefield Centre and two markers on opposite sides of the Battlefield, with their centres on the Central Line and 18"* from the Battlefield Centre.

Then place a single Clue Token on each Terrain Feature except Impassable Terrain.

Rules: End of each Game Turn, pick up a Clue Token from each Terrain Feature where:

- there is a Clue Token,
- a Friendly Scoring unit is in Contact, and
- no Enemy Scoring units are in Contact.

END of Game Turn 3, after picking up Clue Tokens the player with the most Clue Token selects which marker holds the Skull.

In case of a tie, the marker at the Battlefield Centre is selected.

End of Game Completion: the player with the most Scoring units within 6" of the Skull wins.

* For Battlefields of a larger or smaller size the standard 72"x48", replace 18" with a distance equal to a quarter of the Long Battlefield Edge.

Secondary Objectives

If an Army List does not contain enough units that fulfil the requirements of a Secondary Objective, the relevant player first selects all units that fulfil the criteria and can then choose any units for the remaining choices.

6.A Settle the Score

Pre-game Selections: on the opponent's Army List, mark any TWO Rank-and-File units.

End of Game Completion: BOTH marked units are removed as a casualty, Decimated, or Shaken.

6.B Demonstrate Superiority

Pre-game Selections: on the opponent's Army List, mark the TWO most expensive Scoring units.

End of Game Completion: at least one of the marked units is removed as a casualty, Decimated, or Shaken.

6.C Slay the Beast

Pre-game Selections: on the opponent's Army List, mark the TWO most expensive Non-Scoring Rank-and-File units or Characters of Height 4-5 with Solitary.

End of Game Completion: at least one of the marked units is removed as a casualty, Decimated, or Shaken.

6.D Assassinate

Pre-game Selections: on the opponent's Army List, mark TWO Characters who can be Deployed during Battle Setup.

(Note: you cannot mark Hidden Characters.)

End of Game Completion: at least one of the marked units is removed as a casualty, Decimated, or Shaken.

6.E Capture their Banners

Pre-game Selections: on the opponent's Army List, mark ALL Scoring units and the Battle Standard Bearer. At least 3 units must be marked.

End of Game Completion: three or more of the marked units are removed as a casualty, Decimated, or Shaken.

6.F Conserve our Numbers

Pre-game Selections: on YOUR Army List, the opponent marks ALL Scoring units and The Battle Standard Bearer. At least 3 units must be marked.

End of Game Completion: three or more of the marked units are NEITHER removed as a casualty, nor Decimated, nor Shaken.

Terrain Feature Dimensions

The table below gives a recommendation for the dimensions of Terrain Features.

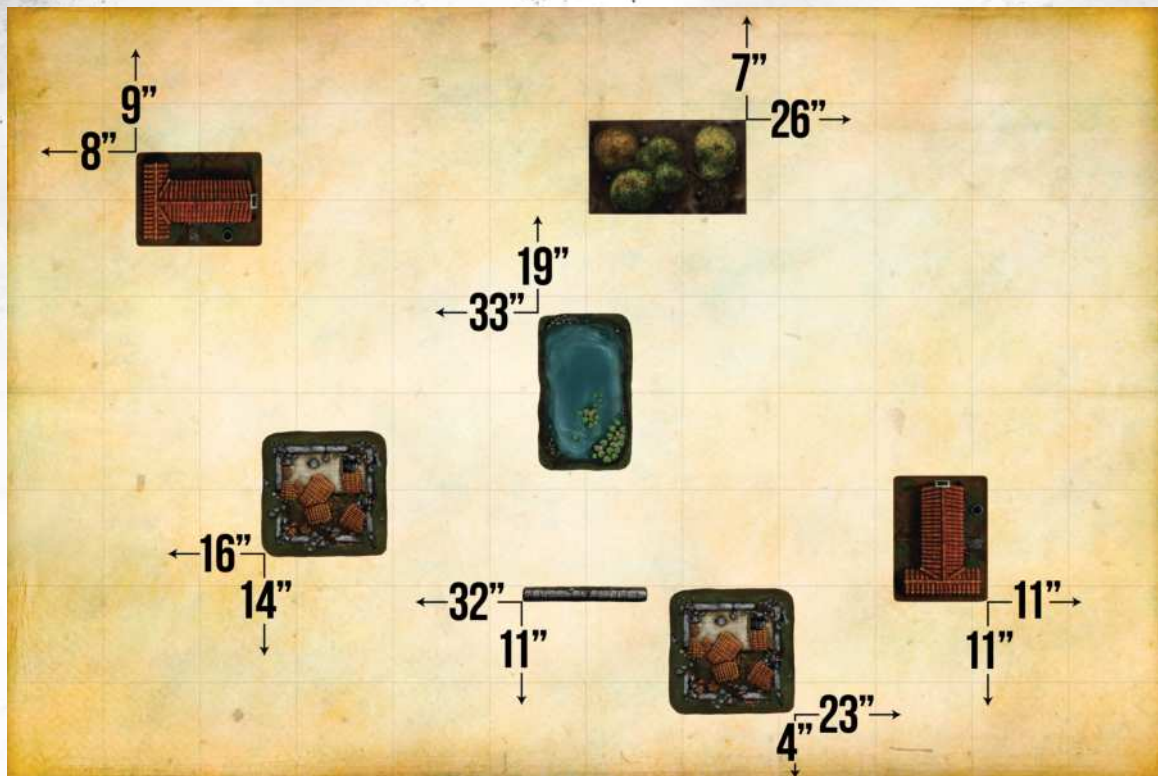

Hill	Forest	Ruins	Impassable Terrain	Impassable Terrain	Water Terrain	Field	Wall

15×20 cm	15×25 cm	20×20 cm	15×20 cm	15×15 cm	15×25 cm	15×20 cm	2.5×20 cm

Battlefields of Vetia

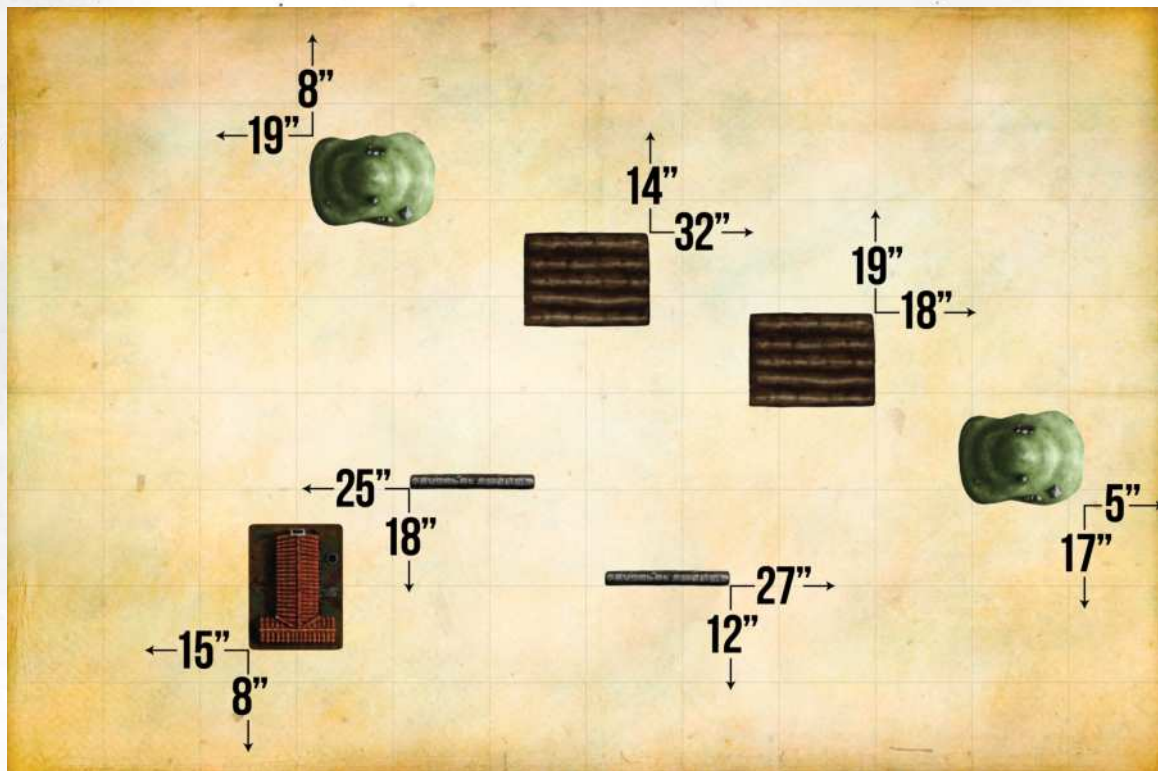

8.A Gewach River

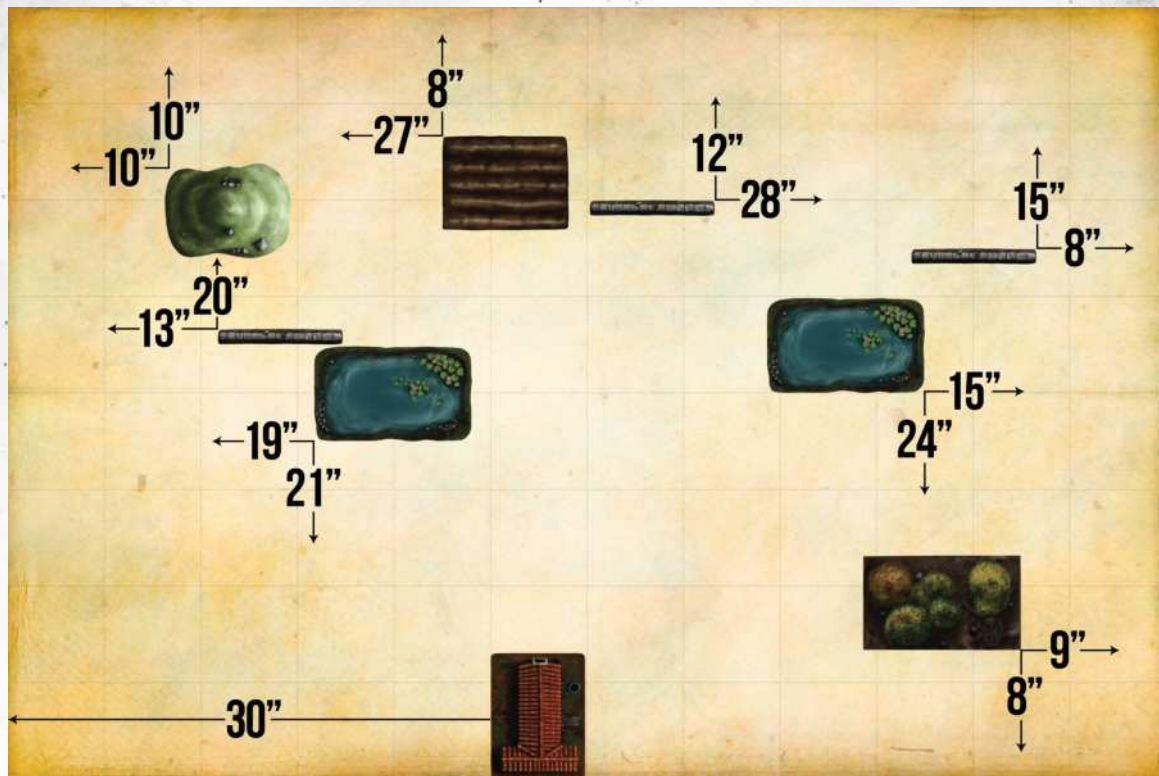

8.B Last Beacon

8.C Outskirts of Ullsberg

8.D Bog of Beasts

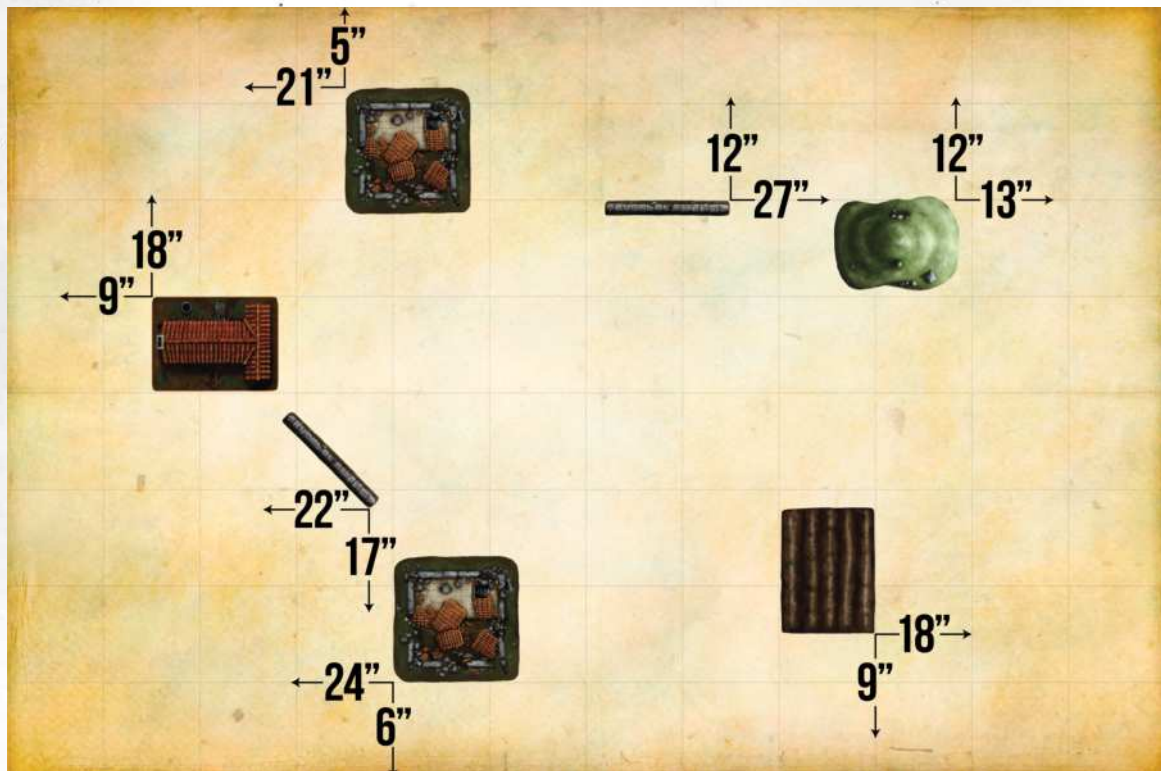

8.E The Maidens

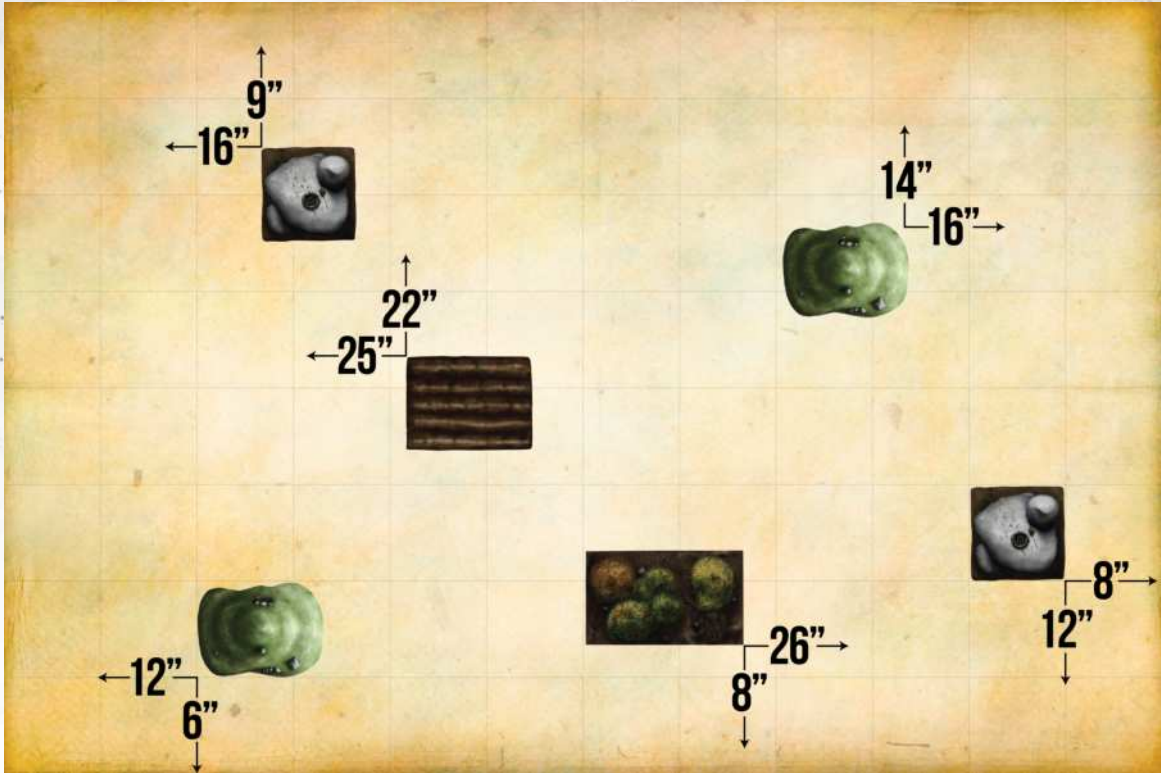

8.F Wyscan Forest

8.G Barren Mountains

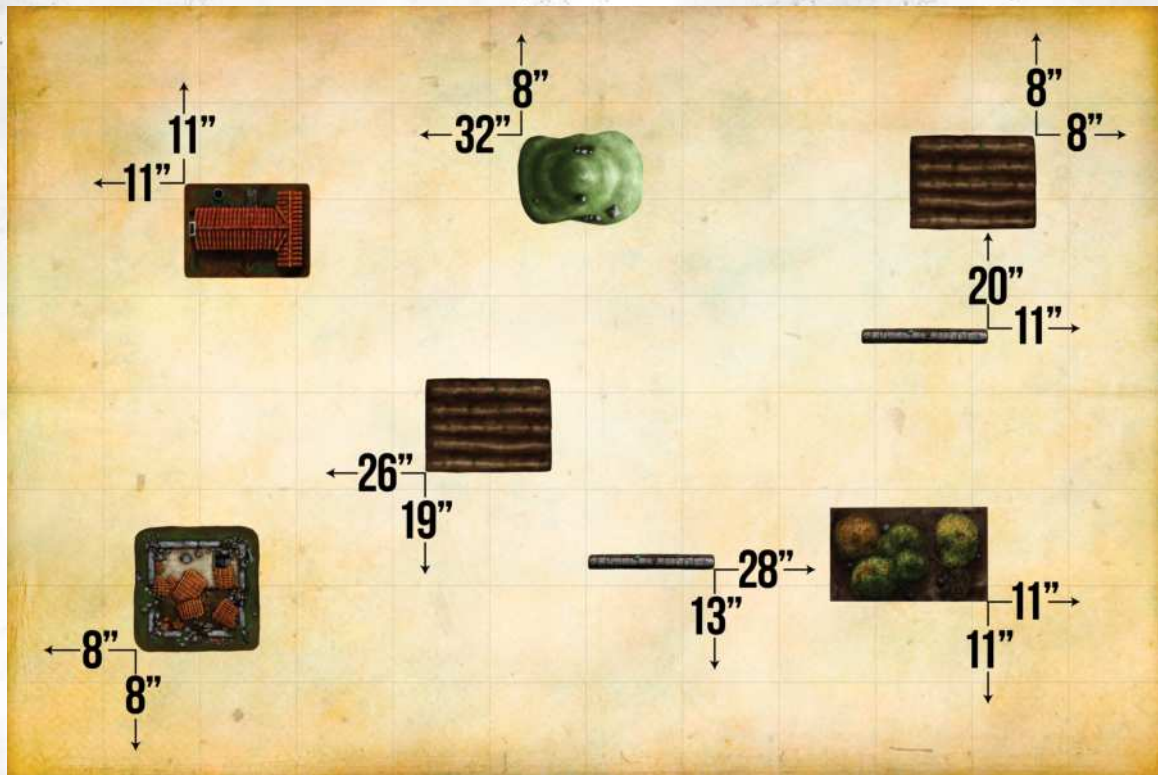

8.H Crimson Peaks

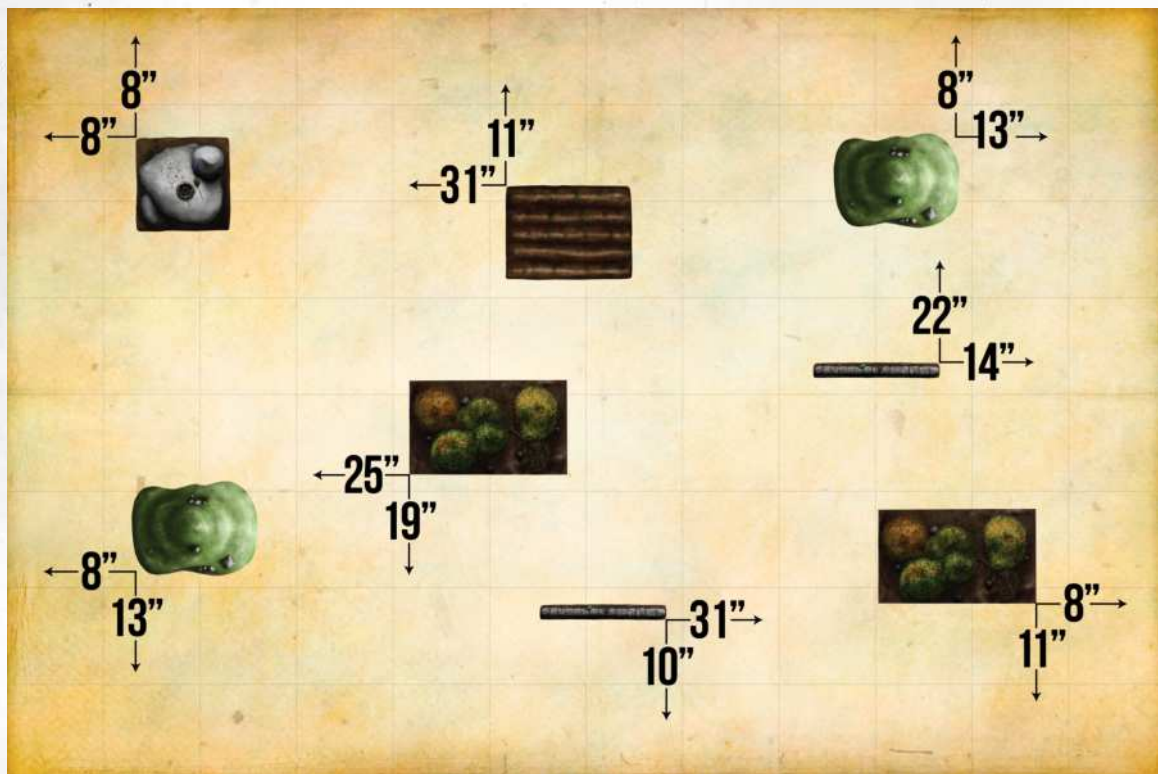

Battlefields of Taphria

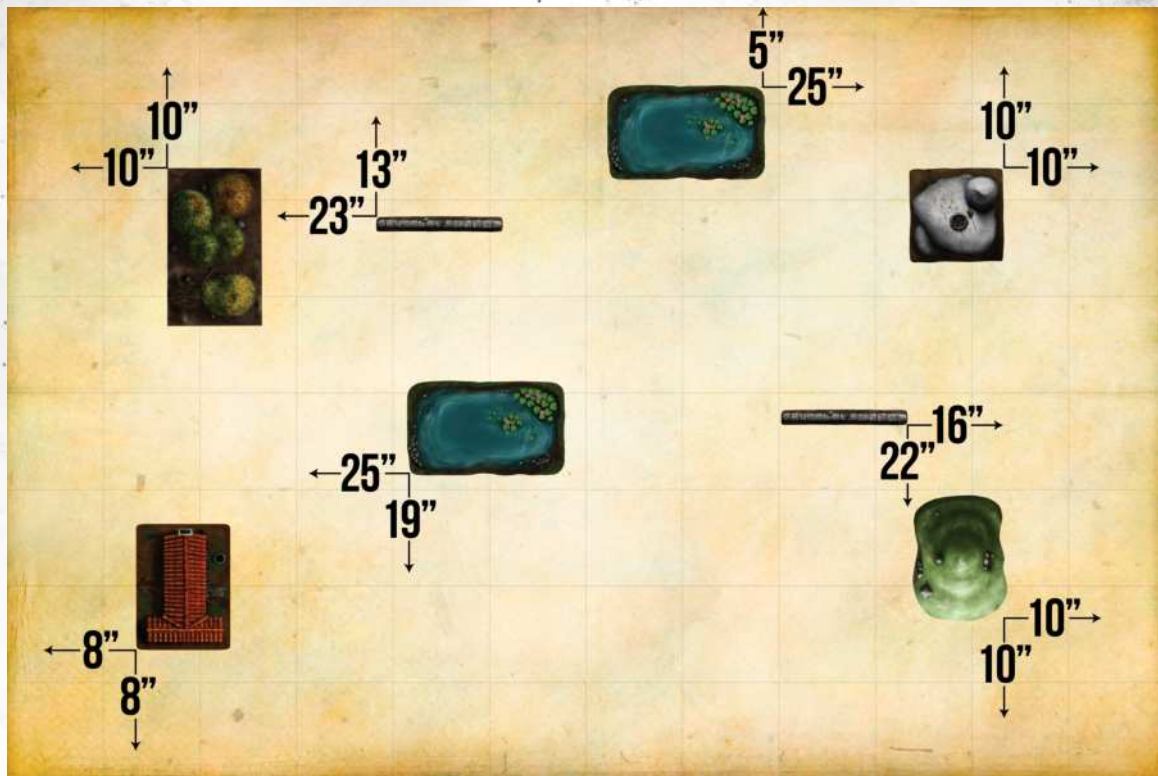

9.A Dogoko Savannah

9.B Nsisiboko Jungle

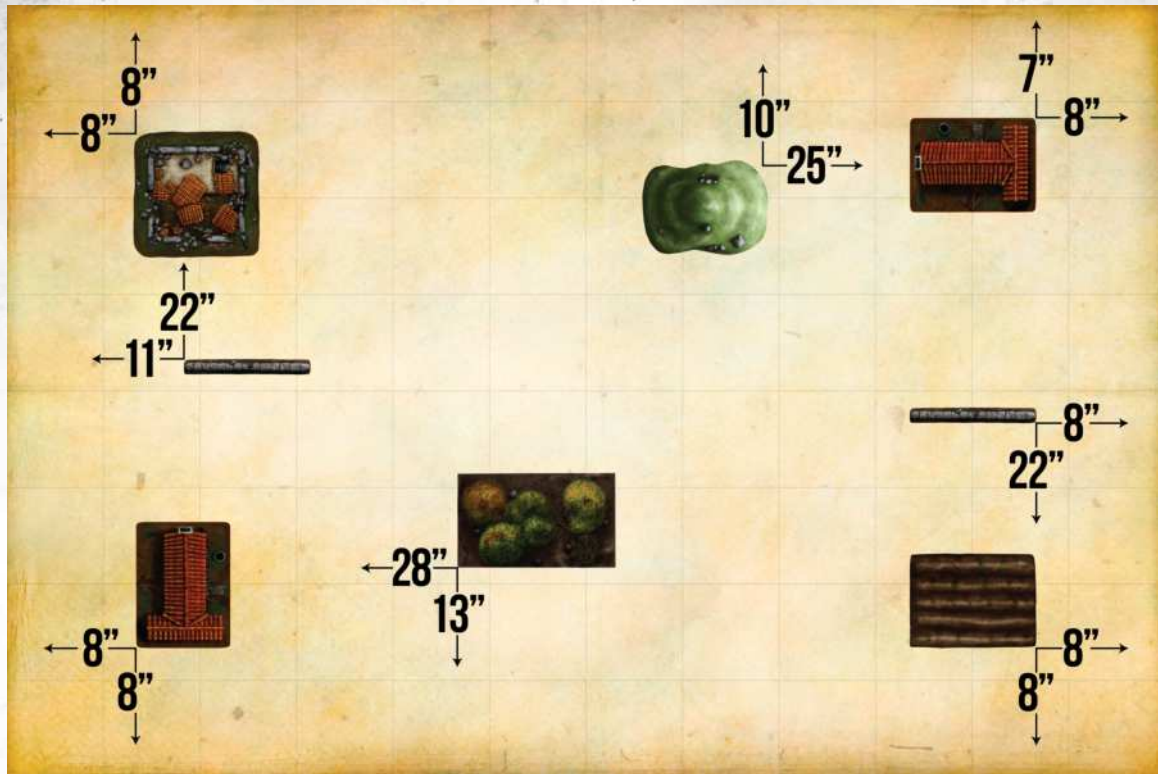

9.C Amharaq Oases

9.D Kegiz Gavem Highlands

9.E Al-Hisn Outskirts

9.F Mountains of Gold

9.G Napaat River Delta

9.H Celed Rymain

LEGENDARY CHARACTERS

Legendary Characters Introduction

The following rules apply to all Legendary Characters

- They all count against the Character Category, and Army Organisation limits where explicitly stated.
- They do not count towards any rarity limitations.
- In this public test version, all Legendary Characters rules are to be treated as model rules, and as such cannot be ignored.

Prologue

All'Excellentissimo Signore Capitano Andrea Barbiano,

*Your memoirs, The Tools of the Trade (948 A.S.), recount your early years confronting the Sylvan militia near Pontefreddo, clashing bloodily with a Barbarian chieftain in Virentia, and resisting the daemonic Sirens of Glauca. They have been widely acclaimed. Since that time, you have become one of the most seasoned and renowned captains of the Iron Crowns.*

At a time when tensions between nations are escalating, your troops will soon be called upon across great battlefields throughout the world. Your wisdom has led you to prepare meticulously for the battles ahead. In this volume, you will find the fruits of the extensive investigations I have conducted on your behalf. I am confident that the information contained herein will help tilt the odds in your favour.

Over the past decades, heroes and villains alike have risen - or re-emerged - across every major faction vying for supremacy in the Mortal World. I have patiently gathered information on no fewer than thirty-three of these extraordinary individuals, in the hope of illuminating their origins, their strengths, and the weaknesses that may yet be exploited. Whether tactical innovators or fierce warriors, whether mortal, undead, or supernal, none should be underestimated. Some will appear only as a threat upon the battlefield whereas others may seek your employ.

The investment you have made in funding this research will undoubtedly bear rich fruit.

This document was completed on Venadi, the fourth day before the Ides of Tandemar, in the year 961 A.S. It was written by Ludovico della Scafa, Professore Emerito dell'Accademia di Charivaria.

Beast Herds (BH)

Mooarrgh, The Perpetuator of Heroes

I had the privilege to meet one of the most celebrated Beast bards still alive. He happens to be one of the few beasts with a womb-modified throat, allowing him to speak Equitan. To show how useful it is, the following is his story rendered faithfully, just as he told me:

"I am Mooarrgh, The Perpetuator of Heroes.

Seven years ago, I belonged to The Wild Hooves, a young herd with only a modest reputation. We were led by a promising longhorn chief, Rhrrt' Red Goatee, who grew a great ambition. As the herds were crossing the Kingdom of Equitaine for the bi-yearly passage, Rhrrt' decided to have fun. It was close to Jovigny-le-Pont, and we went beyond the customary village destruction that the humans tolerate to a point.

This time, the Wild Hooves joyfully burned to ashes a 300 year oak in the middle of a sacred glade. That day, Rhrrt' Red Goatee became Hlnhnyârrt Smokin' Hooves. As expected, the knights formed a retaliatory host that would bring us a glorious battle. Hlnhnyârrt had his sought-after, glorious fight. But he underestimated the fury of the Equitainians. That was his last mistake. The knights spared none but me, the bard, so that I could tell the tale and deter future desecrations. It would turn to more dramatic retaliation, they said.

I wandered, taking with me Hlnhnyârrt's hooves and goatee. Back with my own kin, I wanted to do more than simply speak the memory of heroes. You see, I am not merely a bard, but also a carver of totems. I made two totems to carry the spirit of Hlnhnyârrt and his hooves. They are now trusted by the best fighters of my new herd. To them, I became Mooarrgh, The Perpetuator of Heroes.

When I chant my warsong 'Hooves Are Burning', Hlnhnyârrt spirit revives, The Wild Hooves run wilder than ever! Nobody can resist our charges. The humans say that where we trample, grass does not grow back. Ever since, when heroes die, I create new totems to keep their spirits fighting. Such is my gift. Warn your kind of our coming."

Patron mine, as you can ascertain, the sorcery accomplished by this bard is exceptional: at the death of a strong warrior soul, friend or foe, Mooarrgh can capture its essence in a powerful story; it can then be released at will. Many beast herds in Vetia and Taphria have come to appreciate the tales of this bard, especially the chiefs who can hope to live in spirit long after their death in combat.

Curiously, facing Mooarrgh in battle brings a rare privilege: if killed in action, a brave general would certainly be chanted by Mooarrgh for many years after his death, his songs highly popular among beasts, repeated enthusiastically by many other bards. If living memory is your goal in life, death at his hands may be the way to achieve it.

On the other hand, Mooarrgh is rare in many ways but in your line of work, most notably for his ability to converse with us. Beasts above all respect feats of strength and bravery. A man of your reputation may find them willing to part with rare treasures in exchange for your services.

Mooarrgh, The Perpetuator of Heroes

380 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 25×25 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	5"		8	Light Troops, Musician, Pack Tactics, Stand Behind, Strider (Forest), Tales of the Fallen , Wizard Conclave (3)
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	4	5	0
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Mooarrgh	1	4	3	0	3	Primal Instinct, Wildhorn

Wizard Conclave

The unit selects its spells from the following:

- Fountain of Youth (Druidism)
- Whispers of the Veil (Evocation)
- Predator's Instinct (Shamanism)
- Echoes of the Dark Forest (Hereditary Spell)

Model Rules

Tales of the Fallen: Mooarrgh has the following Spell Scrolls:

- Danse Macabre (Evocation)
- Umbral Majesty (Occultism)
- Dragon's Roar (Pyromancy)
- Wild Guardian (Shamanism)

If a friendly Character anywhere on the Battlefield is removed as a casualty or removes an enemy Character as a casualty whilst being Engaged in Combat, select one of Mooarrgh used Spell Scrolls: the selected Scroll can be used again.

Ghaa!, the Quiet Muzzle

I wish that my next entry could be more grandiose. It is about a minotaur. Not a particularly strong or violent one, nor an exceptional leader. The minotaur I am about to describe is characterised by what can only be described as exceptional mental dullness. Ironically and somewhat unbelievably, this had led to the advent of new, efficient tactics in the Beast Herd's arts of war.

Among the minotaurs, generally regarded as being slow of wit, those who display this trait the most are often called "quiet muzzles", a derogatory term to signify that they don't speak because they have nothing to say. One of these quiet muzzles was Ghaa!, who was noted since his youth for being particularly dim-witted. Some would whisper even smartless. It should be noted here that insulting a minotaur in their presence is particularly ill-advised, even among beastkin.

As I was able to ascertain after laborious reconstitution of beast stories, Ghaa!'s fate changed twenty-two years ago, when his warherd, the Treekin Grazers, foraged the forests of Narrenwald. After they penetrated a Trewi grove and deliberately wrecked it in order to drive the elves out into open combat, they prepared an ambush. Accordingly, Ghaa! was told by his party leader to stay still and do what he did best: to be quiet, under a pile of moss and brushwood on the eastern flank of the battlefield.

He did exactly that. He saw his party begin their attack, but nobody told him to move. He saw the Sylvan counterattack pushing back the warherd, but nobody told him to move. At some stage, one of his herd members, reportedly pelted with arrows, shouted that they needed "help from somebody. Anybody. Even Ghaa!". Hearing that, Ghaa! shook away his cover, and went trampling into action, striking all the Elven archers he had seen take their hidden positions, causing the remaining Sylvan skirmishers on the eastern flank to rout. Despite the beasts losing the battle, Ghaa! had single handedly saved the herd from a total disaster. He was recognised for his deed and it changed his name. From that day, he was no longer Ghaa!, the Quiet Muzzle, but now and forever Ghaa!, the Quiet Muzzle.

Ever since his initial success, he has perfected his ambushing technique. More worryingly, he now teaches his peculiar style of ambushing, by example. As a result, it happens more and more often that several minotaurs set an ambush, standing perfectly still, only to spring forth to wreak havoc on their foes.

All of this would be manageable if isolated to a single herd. But rumour has it that if Ghaa! gets lost, unable to find his way back to his herd, he will integrate into a new one, possibly not even realising it's not his herd. Since the stories of his exploits have spread, other tribes are more than happy to, in essence, adopt him and have him bring his tactics to their herd.

If ever you hear about unusual ambushing minotaurs in your region, that can only be the work of the Quiet Muzzle. Had you been able to speak the language of the beasts, simply telling him to stop may be sufficient. Alas, all I can advise at this time is to keep an eye on your rearguard.

Ghaa!, ~~the~~ the Quiet Muzzle

280 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 40×40 mm

Height 3

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	6"		8	Ambush (Battlefield Edge), Exclusive (Units without other Characters), Fearless, Frenzy, Light Troops, Mindless, Standing in Wait , Strider (Forest), Stubborn, Swiftstride
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	4	4	5	2	Resistance
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Ghaa!	4	5	5	2	4	Fury, Impact Hits (D3 hits), Primal Instinct, Zeal, Minotaur

Model Rules

Standing in Wait: During Pre-game Selections, select either :

- Attached and Teach by Example
- Sleeper, Solitary, and Ambush (Field, Forest, Water Terrain).

Optional Model Rules

Sleeper: Starting on Game Turn 1, a model with Sleeper may decide whether its arrival from Ambush succeeds or fails, without rolling.

Teach by Example: Any unit containing Ghaa! benefits from Mindless, Stubborn, and Swiftstride.

In addition, choose a single Minotaurs unit with a maximum of 5 models. The selected unit gains Ambush (Battlefield Edge), and Ghaa! must enter the Battlefield joined to it.

Daemon Legions (DL)

Tristitia

I shudder to even write Tristitia's name upon your list of potential foes. This is no research ordinarily conducted outside of the holiest of Sunna's bastions. Alas, I will uphold my duties as per your instructions.

There are no official records of this daemon. Yet, it has been a whisper in the shadows for ages, and us humans have but myths to attest to its existence. From the elves, however, we have credible stories from living memory. And I can verify through recent accounts that Wythad is still home to the Haunted Ones.

When mortals have reached the end of their rope, when they see no options left in life, they are sometimes haunted by Tristitia's spectral hound, as black as coal, with blazing red eyes. The hound stalks their shadows and dreams alike, whispering the end of all things. Most are haunted to madness and death. These souls - believe it or not - are the fortunate ones.

Others, Tristitia drives to feats of unthinkable malice and utter depravity, convincing them to spread their suffering to others in exchange for fleeting surcease and permanent changes to their form. Eventually, the Haunted Ones form cults, preaching the surrender to Despair.

One of these cults was founded in the wake of the Inferno. Deep in the Far Ocean, Wythad was a distant outpost of the Arandai Empire, of little concern to any, save the occasional navy ship in need of resupply. Then the volcano burst, covering the entire island in a burning, liquid ash. Wythad was buried beneath deadly rock, and the Arandai reasonably assumed that none had survived.

They were wrong. The whole garrison had survived. Unable to reach the surface, trapped inside the rings of the atoll and with all their tools lost... all they could do was to wait for the inevitable end. They all sunk into the claws of Tristitia, surrendering all hope and all will to live to the black dog in shadow. Accepting to lead out the rest of their existence in darkness, they were said to be granted a new vision: the rituals to allow the Wolf in Shadows to step upon the mortal plane.

Should that fell entity ever take to the battlefield, you would not be blamed to abandon hope. That is no failure of man; that is its domain. The Devourer of Hope, the Breaker of Souls. Tristitia is Despair incarnate.

The church has no doctrine related to Tristitia, so it would be unwise of me to make any assumptions as to its nature. It would doubtlessly assail the spirit and turn the strongest of mortals into a whimpering weakling. It could unleash devastating spells and potentially even fell men by the dozens by its presence alone. Some say it's the most powerful daemon that serves Father Chaos. Some even count it as one of the Dark Gods. But gods may not manifest in their full majesty in our world, and therein lies the chance - not hope - of victory. In a lesser form, it's not inconceivable that you may drive this daemon back beyond the veil. We must all fight the darkness with every ounce of our being. Determination beyond hope itself can lend you the strength to overcome Despair.

Tristitia

800 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 50×100 mm

Height 5

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	6"		9	Abandon All Hope , Fearless, General, Growing Despair , Horror, Solitary, Supernal, Swiftstride, Terror, Wizard Master
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	7	4	6	0	Aegis (5+), Hard Target (1)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Tristitia	5	4	9	10	5	Magical Attacks, March and Shoot, Psychic Attacks, Stomp Attack (D6 hits), Daemon

— Magic Options —

pts—

Evocation

— Model Rules —

Abandon All Hope: During Tristitia's Shooting Phase, they can make a Shooting Attack that targets all enemy units within 12" of Tristitia (including those Engaged in Combat and outside Front Arc and/or Line of Sight). Each target suffers 1 hit for each Rank it has, with Strength 9, Armour Penetration 10, Magical Attacks and Psychic Attacks. This attack can be used even if Tristitia is Engaged in Combat.

Growing Despair: Afflict (–1 Dis, –X Def, and –X Off), where 'X' is equal to the number of the current Game Turn.

Tergon Khan

Patron mine, I appreciate that you have told me not to "dig up ancient history", but I suggest making an exception for Tergon Khan, as rumours have it that the would-be Daemon Emperor walks this world again, doubtlessly plotting to overthrow Tsuandan and the Dragon Emperor Gonglu. As familiarity with Tsuandan culture makes clear, you must pay great respect to its heritage should you seek an audience. This heritage goes back centuries and lies at the very core of this conflict.

Before he was Tergon Khan, this daemon was once mortal. Claiming to be the rightful heir of the last human Emperor of Tsuandan (before Gonglu), Tergon Khan in his exile united ogres, horse wranglers and cultists under his banner, as an embodied avenger of wounded pride - pushing people away from traditional gods and toward Savar by emphasising the humiliation Gonglu had brought upon the people of Tsuandan: "They took our land, and our self respect, and we shall claw both back from the scaled tyrant"

When Gonglu's favourite son went to stop the invaders, Tergon issued a challenge to the Prince of the Skies and slew him in single combat, having reportedly learned techniques to battle sky-borne foes from Wasteland Feldraks. It was for this great feat, this great invasion, that Tergon Khan ascended to daemonhood. But even the risen Tergon Khan could not best the overpowering fury of the bereaved Dragon Emperor, who vanquished Tergon Khan himself in a final confrontation that would serve as the beginning of an eternal conflict. One that, according to the followers of the Dark Gods, Tergon Khan, the immortal, shall inevitably win.

As internal strife once again falls over Tsuandan, whispers of the ancient enemy's return have grasped the nation. As the Tergonnead reads: "He is the bane of the dragons, and in the blood of the dragons, he is reborn". This is no mere figure of speech. Summoning a daemon such as Tergon indeed requires a most intricate and powerful ritual, costly both in resources and blood. If my sources are to be believed: not just any blood, but that of a dragon.

From what's been described in old Tsuandan texts, Tergon Khan's powers as a daemon are twisted to the purpose of destroying Gonglu. He shapes his legion to resemble that of the steppe tribes that he once commanded to wage war upon Tsuandan. Mounted atop demonic steeds, his vanguard rides swiftly across the battlefield, their very footsteps poisoning Tsuandan soil. So great is his enmity for the Dragon Emperor, that any dragon flees before his wrath, lest they be pierced by his unholy form. As any Omen of Savar, Tergon Khan excels in duels against the great and the glorious. And as any daemon of reputation, he's not easily killed. Then, on the opposing side stands the mighty Dragon Emperor Gonglu.

While common mercenary guidelines advise against getting involved in old blood feuds, I see an opportunity. Neither side is willing to back down, and a great host that may tip the scales of this war may well be worth its weight in gold, that both parties are doubtlessly able to pay. In addition, given that these two characters are so entrenched in their hatred for each other, chances are you may avoid the deadliest clashes.

Tergon Khan

600 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base see mount

Height see mount

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	see mount		10	Commander of the Steppes , Disciplined, Divine Right , Fearless, General, Golden Helm , Revoke the Mandate of Heaven , Supernal, Swiftstride, Wizard Adept
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	4	9	5	0	Aegis (4+, against Magical Attacks), Aegis (5+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Tergon Khan	D3+3	D6+4	6	3	6	Dominant Bronze Backbone, Lethal Strike (towards Characters), Magical Attacks, Multiple Wounds (2, against Characters), Zeal (Dragons), Daemon

Model Rules

Commander of the Steppes: At the start of each friendly Player Turn, you may select a friendly unit within 12" of Tergon Khan entirely with Mount. The selected unit gains Extra Support (+1) and Strider. Duration: One Turn.

Divine Right: During Combat Choices, the opponent must choose a Character from one of their units that is in contact with the model's bearer's unit. The chosen Character Character and the model with Divine Right counts count as being in contact with each other.

In addition, while the model with Divine Right is in contact with an enemy Character Character, do not roll for determining its stats; instead, all random characteristic characteristics are considered to have rolled the maximum possible value.

Golden Helm: Courage Tests taken by the unit gain Minimised.

Revoke the Mandate of Heaven: Each Character or model with Dragon that either:

- Breaks from a Round of Combat in which a unit containing Tergon Khan was Engaged, or
- Selects Flee! as a Charge Reaction when a unit containing Tergon Khan declared a Charge

Suffers D3 hits with Str 6, AP 3, Magical Attacks and Zeal (against Dragon).

Magic Options

pts-

Divination

Mount Options (must choose one)

pts-

Hellsteed

free

Tergon's Great Beast of Prophecy

free

Tergon's Great Beast of Prophecy

Rarity: Uncommon Base 50×75 mm
Height 4

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	7"		C
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	4	C	5	C
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Tergon's Great Beast of Pro.	2	3	4	1	3	Devastating Charge (+1 Str, +1 AP), Impact Hits (2 hits), Magical Attacks, Stomp Attack (1 hit), Mount

Hellsteed

Rarity: Uncommon Base 25×50 mm
Height 2

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	10"		C	Feigned Flight, Hit and Run, Light Troops, Strider, Vanguard
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	C	C	C	C
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Hellsteed	1	3	3	0	3	Magical Attacks, Mount

Dread Elves (DE)

Tethaen, the Ocean Terror

Over the past four years, a strange hunter has been spotted fighting alongside Dread Elf corsairs. Reliable stories of this hunter have proven difficult to obtain. However, those I have managed to verify seem to converge on a tale of vengeance.

Thirty years ago, a corsair named Sethail was soon to become captain of a Swordfish (their elven frigates) and a promising marriage had been arranged with the daughter of a wealthy ship owner. However, while they were sailing the Shattered Sea, he was suddenly relieved of his position and left on a rotten skiff. Doomed and soon forgotten.

Twenty-five years later, Dathen ships started coming under attack in an unusual manner. As the captain was standing near the helm, a blathueg (one of the various ocean terrors that the Daeb managed to tame) carrying a raggedly dressed elf on its back would leap onto the deck and grab the captain, pulling him or her back into the sea. Then, at the surface and in front of the terrified crew, the beast would play with its prey, slowly and painfully ending the captain's life by a sadistic mix of biting and strangling. All the while its rider loudly made sardonic conversation with and laughed at the unfortunate soul, until fully mauled and swallowed by the beast, after which the two departed, as swiftly as they had appeared.

Curiously, all victims had been promoted to captain around the same time, some thirty years ago. Only one of them met a different fate, as he was standing with his wife, the daughter of a ship owner: they were captured together, and both were killed not by the beast, but by the hand of the elf. I can only infer from these stories that Sethail was behind those murders. Somehow, he must have managed to tame one of the many ocean terrors that thrive in the Shattered Sea, found land and survived well enough to plot his revenge, although quite possibly at the cost of his sanity. While he seems to have completed his mission, the bloodlust remains to this day.

In the past few years, a familiar hunter on an ocean terror has shown up to many a naval battle to assail the enemies of the Dread Elves. Tethaen, as they now call him, and his sea mount have become very popular among the Dread Elf sailors, although their captains are reportedly less enthusiastic. Unexpectedly, he has even been spotted on land, adjacent to the coast. While mostly aquatic beings, ocean terrors have been known to stay on land for extended periods of time.

Tethaen sports a bizarre array of weapons such as barbed nets and a whaling harpoon. He remains hidden, waiting to ambush from a body of water, be it fresh or salt. With his mount, he strikes fast and without warning. As soon as they capture a victim, they abandon the fight and return to the water, where the victim is eaten alive by the blathueg.

I have invested a considerable sum and taken great personal risks to learn more about this elf. That being said, I believe that more is to be uncovered. Who knows if his tales of vengeance are fully at their end? Perhaps it is you who stand to gain from the murder of a yet unsuspecting elven captain?

Tethaen, the Ocean Terror

600 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 50×75 mm

Height 4

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	8"		10	Ambush (Battlefield Edge, Water Terrain), A Watery Grave , Barbed Nets , Coastal Predator , Disciplined, Horror, Light Troops, Solitary, Strider (Water Terrain), Swiftstride
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm	Blessed by Harag
	5	8	5	4
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Tethaen	4	8	4	1	8	Artistry of Death, Elven Finesse, Grim Harpoon , Elf
Blaishoi	4	4	6	3	4	Devastating Charge (Distracting), Poison Attacks, Stomp Attack (1 hit), Beast , Mount

Model Rules

A Watery Grave: Tethaen is always considered to have rolled a 3+ when rolling for whether he arrives using Ambush. In addition, at the beginning of "Post Combat" (Round of Combat, Step 6), if Tethaen won the Round of Combat and an enemy Character in that Combat was removed as a casualty, then Tethaen may be placed in Ambush.

Barbed Nets: Afflict (–1 Str, –1 AP)

Blessed by Harag: Tethaen's rags and strange hat never stop dripping, even when out of the water.

Aegis (5+) and Resistance (against Flaming Attacks).

Coastal Predator: The unit benefits benefit from Hard Target (1) while in contact with a Water Terrain.

Grim Harpoon: Counts as a Great Weapon in Melee. +1 Att.

Any unit that suffers one or more ranged hits from this weapon loses Swiftstride, and cannot regain it in any way, until the start of the Active Player's next Turn.

Shooting Weapons

Grim Harpoon: Shooting Weapon.

Name	Aim	Range	Shots	Str	AP	Attack Attributes
Grim Harpoon	3+	18"	1	6	3	Accurate, Grim Harpoon, Quick to Fire

The Black Rose

During the last century, a mysterious Dread Elf warrior has risen among the corsair slavers who regularly raid the coasts of Vetia and Taphria. She is most readily recognized by her black chestplate, engraved with a rose, along with an equally black mask covering the upper half of her face. Even to her kin, her true identity was long unknown.

Aside from her intimidating appearance, what stands out about this elf is that despite her apparent standing as a corsair, she doesn't seem to prioritise capturing slaves by the numbers. Instead, most of her raids appear to be precisely tailored to the capture of highly valuable individuals or artefacts. A man of your talents would recognize this as a clear sign of a covert agent. But acting on whose behalf?

All was revealed in the recent election of consuls, where the cunning politician Curnaeth Gaendra, who was already at the head of the Hunter's Lodge, the Republic's spy network which commands the Black Cloaks, was elected as Consul of Ceremonies. Through a series of unexpected, swayed votes, the senators of the Fatherland Faction, who long to restore Daeb's control over Vetia, voted for The Black Rose to become the new Consul of Commerce. This is when the identity of The Black Rose was revealed to be Curnaeth Dolbaen, the very sister of Gaendra! The Obsidian Warden, general of the Obsidian Guard in charge of the protection of the Obsidian Throne where the three consuls take seat, opposed the election of the two sisters as fraudulent. He defied them both through a ritual duel. The Black Rose accepted, killed him and replaced him at the top of that institution. She famously justified her victory by shouting: "I am the heir of Aembeghen! I am the body and the voice of the Daeb!"

The two sisters belong to the Curnaeth, a powerful Silexian family of the highest noble blood and the most ancient origins, which has provided many top-level civil servants to the Republic for centuries. Dolbaen's elder sister Gaendra has been educated specifically for political duties, which led her to rise very fast in her political career, and to become the youngest recorded director of the Hunter's Lodge, aged merely 150. The youth and early career of Dolbaen is harder to track as she maintained her anonymity under the cover of the Black Rose for so long. Unlike her sister though, she seems to have received a more specialised martial training, likely involving highly skilled masters at arms, specifically the masters of the Sylvan Blade Dancers.

As such, her fighting style is distinctive and in some ways more reminiscent of the Sylvan Elves: more unpredictable than the typically sober and brutally efficient Daeb fighting style; yet no less deadly. She wields an ancient pair of blades that belonged to a legendary Dread Elf hero named Aembeghen who was rumoured to have fallen in a war against the Kingdom of Equitaine.

The Black Rose is an efficient killer who seeks out enemy commanders. Dueling her has been the last mistake of many would-be heroes. Instead, I advise setting honour aside. Lure her in and overwhelm her with your best troops, while staying safely behind. The minor blow to your reputation would surely be compensated tenfold by the fortune that her legendary blades should sell for.

The Black Rose

400 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	5"		10	Disciplined, General, Light Troops
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	8	3	4	Aegis (5+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
The Black Rose	4	8	4	1	8	Artistry of Death, Aembeghen's Blades , Dance of the Rose , Academy, Elf, Metal Armour

Options

One choice only:

The Obsidian Thorns

pts-

Model Rules

Aembeghen's Blades: Paired Weapons. If there are any enemy Characters in contact with the wielder's unit, the Black Rose gains +2 Att.

In addition, any Melee Attacks the Black Rose allocates against a Character gain +2 Str, +4 AP.

Dance of the Rose: During Combat Choices, the Black Rose must select one of the following Dances, with Duration: Round of Combat. The Black Rose cannot select a specific Dance again until one or more of the following has occurred:

- She is not Engaged in Combat.
- She has selected all Dances.
- She can only select Dance of Caedhren, and it is not possible to do the Make Way.

Dances:

- Dance of Caedhren: the Black Rose can use Make Way, even if she is already in contact with an enemy model, provided she moves into contact with an enemy Character in her unit's Front Facing.
- Dance of Ceinran: Nominate one enemy Character model in contact with the Black Rose. The Black Rose and the selected Character always have 0 Attacks, and no attacks nor hits can be assigned to either. At Agility Step 0, the Black Rose rolls 1D3, Maximized, and the selected Character rolls 1D3. If either model rolls lower, it loses a number of Health Points equal to the difference between the two rolls.
- Dance of Nabh:
The Black Rose gains Hatred (against Characters) and Zeal (against Characters).
Attacks against the Black Rose gain +1 to hit.

Optional Model Rules

The Obsidian Thorns: The Black Rose gains Exclusive (Obsidian Guard), Magic Resistance (1), and all models in her unit gain +1 Charge Speed.

In addition, enemy units are not allowed to choose the Flee! Charge Reaction to Charges declared on them by the Black Rose's unit, unless they are Shaken.

Note: this has no influence on Charge Reactions from other units.

Dwarven Holds (DH)

Duna Bregold, Master of the Guild of Lorekeepers

While veneration for the elderly and the wise is not uncommon among the races of our world, the dwarves often consider age and wisdom one and the same. Through all of my years, I have yet to see a clearer example of this than Duna Bregold. Said to have been born in the final years of the 8th Age, Duna is by far the oldest dwarf alive, witnessing the rise of Sunna herself. Her origin is widely attributed to Nevaz Nedathiz: the "Truehome Hold", a mythical settlement believed to have been razed by survivors of the Vermin Empire. With her kin scattered and home lost, she could no longer continue her duties as the lorekeeper of her hold.

Rather than seek vengeance which one would expect of her people, Duna took to the road - not in bitterness, but with purpose - offering counsel to lorekeepers across the mountain holds. Her experience and lack of a true home made many dwarves see her as both considerate and unbiased, and her words slowly but surely became as trusted as the mountains she visited. Centuries later, she was unanimously elected as the Master of the Guild of Loremasters, one of the most honorable positions among the Dwarven Holds and one that she will keep until her dying day.

One might expect such an ancient figure to struggle reaching a conclusion or being prone to rambling. Nothing could be further from the truth. Her mind and tongue are as sharp as a chisel, and many a pompous ego has been punctured by her brief, barbed replies. Her gravelly voice has ended arguments that raged for weeks, and so weighty is her word that few dwarves require more than her judgement to accept a matter as settled. Those who have argued with a dwarf in the past will appreciate just how impressive this ability is.

Each of her rulings is recorded in a vast tome of vellum, carried from hold to hold by her apprentice lorekeepers. Though her hands are gnarled, they still grip chisel and hammer, and she personally carves her most vital judgments into the stone walls of every hold she visits. The fiddly matter of ink and parchment she leaves to her "young" apprentices, often veterans of two centuries or more.

As expected of a dwarven loremaster, she also chronicles great battles; especially when matters of oaths or grudges are in dispute. On such occasions, Duna enters the field, borne aloft atop her immense tome by her apprentices, like an idol of old: an unshaken voice amid the roar of war. To say her presence is inspiring would be an insulting understatement. Her authority allows her to hold a warrior's oath fulfilled, or inscribe a failure in shame upon her ledger. For dwarves, such matters weigh heavier than life itself. Though not a combatant herself, she is never far from loyal protectors who would gladly die before allowing a single drop of enemy blood to stain her tome.

Should you seek combat, ask yourself: is slaying an old dwarf worth the grudge of an age? But if you seek wisdom, true and heavy as mountain stone; then bring your best manners and your finest brew. A wise sage may well value the way of comradery and coin.

Duna Bregold, Master of the Guild of Lorekeepers

520 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 40×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha	Mob	Dis	Model Rules
	3"	4"	9	Disciplined, The Living Law , Wonders of the Age
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	4	4	5	5	Aegis (5+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Duna Bregold	2	4	4	1	2	Devastating Charge (+1 Str, +1 AP), Paired Weapons, Dwarf , Metal Armour
Shield Bearers (2)	1	5	4	1	2	Devastating Charge (+1 Str, +1 AP), Dwarf , Mount

Model Rules

The Living Law: At the beginning of each Friendly Melee Phase, select an enemy unit on your opponent's Army List. The selected unit becomes marked for the purpose of Ancient Grudge. Duration: Permanent.

Wonders of the Age: Duna Bregold's Paired Weapons have the following Runic Enchantments: Rune of Anger, Rune of Might, Rune of Precision.

In addition, Duna Bregold has the following Runic Artefacts: Rune of Denial, Rune of Devouring, and Rune of Grounding. This is in addition to the usual limitation of Runic Items, however the Rune of Denial, Rune of Devouring, and Rune of Grounding cannot be activated by other friendly models.

Brewmaster Tador Berafrig

Nevaz Agoz is a small hold in northern Vetia, in the mountains of Åskland. It is situated over a great crevasse, which plunges deep beneath the earth and exposes the hold to regular dangers of incursion from the beings that dwell below. The broad access to the Deeps has generated significant wealth for Nevaz Agoz, and the mining guild there is among the most powerful of all dwarven holds. Deep Watch units work all hours of the day to guard the edge of the ravine, and it is not unknown for entire neighbourhoods of the city to be overrun, and need to be liberated. Into this environment, Tador Berafrig was born. His parents were both miners, a prestigious profession if ever there was one. It was expected he would follow them into this career. However, after Nevaz Agoz was cut off during the harsh winter of 823 A.S. and the Great Quake of 824 A.S., and its Master Brewer and chief apprentice was struck down by the gnawing sickness, it became urgently necessary for someone to take up the role. With a rebellious streak that drove him to look for a new path, away from the expectations of his parents, Tador accepted the responsibility - and the chance to operate with limited oversight.

His first attempts were, by all accounts, catastrophic. Indeed, so flavourless was the early output that tavern-goers joked it left their mouths purely to water the stone floors. Whether from shame or stubbornness, Berafrig persisted. In the years it took for Nevaz Agoz to restore connections with the wider dwarven world, he refined the old instructions and ingredients, eventually restoring satisfactory ale to the mugs of Nevaz Agoz. But he did not stop there.

Once Nevaz Agoz was reconnected with the wider holds, Tador began experimenting with rare additives: herbs, fungi, minerals; some mundane, others clearly magical. This was met with mixed reactions. While the younger generation embraced the novelty, the older dwarves were outraged. That sentiment has only deepened with the creation of his most infamous concoction: the Brew of the Ancestors. Said to draw from the very bones of the mountains, this potion-like ale induces in its drinker a strange, reverent state. Beards grow, hair pales, and the drinker gains a bearing of age and authority - if only for a time. To his followers, it is an elixir of dignity. To his detractors, it is one more sign that he fails to respect tradition and the proper path to gain wisdom and respect - time.

Decades later, Tador seems to have retained his rebellious streak as he and his followers have joined dwarven expeditions to distant lands as a way of searching for more exotic ingredients. While Tador himself is not trained for combat (aside from the obligatory five years of military drills in his hold) he and his miners remain as steadfast and sturdy as any dwarf. While their equipment is basic, Tador never goes into battle without a keg of his famous brew that he distributes to his followers, making them punch above their measure.

If Captain Barbiano is considering seeking this brew for himself, I would advise caution. Tador's concoctions can undoubtedly invigorate, but the side effects within humans remain unknown. Further study may be warranted. My fees, as always, are negotiable.

Brewmaster Tador Berafrig

210 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha	Mob	Dis	Model Rules
	3"	4"	9	Ambush (Battlefield Edge), Attached, Captain, Exclusive (Miners), Light Troops, Master Brewer
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	4	5	4	Aegis (3+, against Flaming Attacks), Shield, The Aleward Crew
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Tador Berafrig	3	4	4	1	2	Devastating Charge (+1 Str, +1 AP), Hand-and-a-Half, Great Weapon, Dwarf , Metal Armour

Model Rules

Master Brewer: During each friendly Magic Phase, at any time before 'Casting Spells' (Magic Phase, 5), the Master Brewer may select a single of the following Ales to affect his unit. Duration: One Turn.

- Stout Ale: Fearless, Stubborn, and Unruly.
- Bitter Ale: Fury, Hatred, and Unruly.
- Red Ale: Lethal Strike, Unruly, and Zeal.

The Aleward Crew: When Tador Berafrig is Deployed, all Rank-and-File models in that unit gains +1 Armour and Aegis (3+, against Flaming Attacks). Duration: Permanent.

Empire of Sonnstahl (EoS)

Heinrich Falkenbach

Inquisitors serve as the extrajudicial arm of the Church. Among them, few names command fear and respect on par with Heinrich Falkenbach.

Formerly of Kölen, a swamp-ridden province known only for tragic disappearances and its dubious cheese popular with the Equitarians, Falkenbach's first major trial came shortly after his ordination. After days of slow tracking, he managed to destroy a shadowy daemon in the bogs that have been haunting local villages, and he rooted out the cult responsible for its presence. He was next sent to the Forsaken Marches, where he eliminated a powerful necromancer who had fortified himself in exile. But Falkenbach's most lauded act that is frequently cited, demonstrating a remarkably keen eye, was identifying and destroying a vampire at a royal wedding in Tobranca, who sought to infiltrate the Destrian royal family.

Following this act, the High Prelate himself deemed Falkenbach's skills vital to the future of the Inquisition and summoned him to Aschau to serve as a tutor of new Inquisitors. There, he authored three works now considered both essential and controversial: "Tainted Blood: On Vampires and Their Blight", "From the Abyss: Supernals and Cults", and the field manual "Fire Demands No Right", named after his personal motto, famous for being the last words his prey hears before meeting the face of Gregor's Holy Hammer. This mighty weapon was a gift from the High Prelate and named after his predecessor Gregor, who is famous for his decision to move the church's head seat to an abbey right here in Reva, Arcalea. Subsequent inquisitors have emulated similar weaponry in their fight against evil, most commonly the Hammer of Witches. It would not be an understatement to claim that many of the methods or disciplines that the inquisitors of today are known and feared for came from Falkenbach himself.

It would be an error, however, to consider Falkenbach merely a teacher of bloodletting. His command of battlefield doctrine has earned him temporary appointments as a military commander, particularly in purgation campaigns. Units trained under him are renowned for their proficiency in the art of witch hunting and slaying of otherworldly beasts.

The former students of Falkenbach are similarly characterised by their heightened sense of duty. They spend twelve months training with the military chain of command taught at the Imperial Academies of Sonnstahl, in order to lead regiments into battle against the terrifying foes they hunt.

Falkenbach is a difficult man by all accounts: stern, reclusive, and disinclined to casual speech. He neither smiles nor encourages small talk. The only warmth he is known to show is toward his dog, a loyal Koelhund named Monti who never leaves his master's side, even in battle. Soldiers say that Falkenbach trusts its growl more than any command from the marshals. Koelhunds are also known for being adept hunting dogs, suitable to lead the charge against enemy ranks.

By all accounts, Heinrich Falkenbach is a seasoned killer of several powerful adversaries, both mortal and immortal. He's employed only to assist in Sonnstahl's purgation campaigns, where no mercy is to be shown and where external assistance is typically refused. As such, I advise extreme caution should you encounter this man. Given his age, however, a prolonged engagement may blunt his effectiveness.

Heinrich Falkenbach

240 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	4"		9	A Koelhund's Chase, Divine Jurisdiction , Fearless, General, Imperial Authority, Light Troops
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	5	4	3	Aegis (4+), Shield
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Heinrich Falkenbach	3	5	4	1	5	Lethal Strike, March and Shoot, Silver Shots , Zeal, Gregor's Holy Hammer , Repeater Pistol, Human, Metal Armour

Model Rules

A Koelhund's Chase: Rolls for Charge Range and Pursue Distance by the model's unit gain Maximized.

Divine Jurisdiction: All Inquisitors may give the Steady, Men! Order to their units.

In addition, an Army List containing Heinrich Falkenbach changes the following Orders:

- Brace For Impact! changes into: Cut the Head of the Snake!
 - The target gains First Strike (Hatred (against Character)) and Fury (against units containing a Character).
- Ready! Aim! Fire! changes into Aim for the Weak Spot!
 - If an attack with Aim for the Weak Spot! wounds with a to-wound roll of '6', neither Aegis nor Regeneration Saves can be taken against it.

Gregor's Holy Hammer: Hand Weapon, +1 Str, +1 AP, Multiple Wounds (2, against Aegis or Regeneration*).

*Including against models with Aegis or Regeneration Saves with conditional applications.

Silver Shots: Shooting Attacks made by the model part with a Brace of Pistols, Crossbow, or Repeater Pistol gain Lethal Strike and Zeal.

Brother Tomaz

Born in the gutters of Alfhaven and raised by a gang of cutpurses, Tomaz was for many years a recurring nuisance to city watchmen, jailers, and tavern staff alike, known for pickpocketing, brawling, and petty drunkenness. That all changed after an encounter with Princess Josepha during her visit to the grand cathedral of Alfhaven for a local religious celebration. From her hand, he received a small charm of Aloënnā, a minor Vosen deity representing water and life. According to Tomaz himself, something changed in him that day. He swore off his thieving ways and pledged himself to the divine. The church took him in; housed and fed him in exchange for basic services in and around the grand cathedral. According to one of his former peers, being part of the church was something that Tomaz deeply loved and his highest goal was to become a prelate of Alfhaven.

However, he was not accepted into the church's ecclesiastical order due to his antagonistic behaviour, constantly arguing and picking fights. When the priests told him to atone for his past sins, he sought to stamp out sin in others. Tomaz spent more time out in the city, loudly preaching and accusing strangers of impiety and heresy, carrying a wooden sign, "REPENT" scrawled in blood red paint. He was quickly regarded as a pest by the locals. Still, the church continued to care for him and kept him in their workforce, even giving him further chances to join the ecclesiastical order, yet time and again he would fail. One of his mentors described him as a lost soul reaching out for salvation but too flawed to grasp it.

In 949 A.S., when Åsklander raiders breached the western gates, a group of citizens barricaded themselves in the Grand Cathedral. As the barbarians breached the church doors, Tomaz charged at them, armed with nothing but his sign. Witnesses say his charge inspired others. One by one, the congregation joined Tomaz and repelled the invaders and suddenly, the town outcast became a rallying point. More importantly though, some swore that as Tomaz fought, a glow came over them and their wounds began to mend.

The church, ever cautious with miracles, investigated. Tomaz, for his part, denied the rumours. He could not replicate the effect, nor did he wish to claim divine favor. "I but hit men with the word," he reportedly said, which only led to more arguments and fights. Tomaz began volunteering and even inviting himself to regional military missions. Across several campaigns, the story repeated itself. Those he stood next to found courage at his side, and once again claimed that a healing spell came over them. Quickly, the rumors of his work began to spread, most of which were conflicting. A heroic prelate, an outcast, a usurper, a servant. Today, he is a wanderer, preaching in towns across Vetia and joining military campaigns, often carrying naught but his sign, a message with which to inspire and smite.

Brother Tomaz is not a commander and has no military training, yet would undoubtedly be a tough opponent to overcome in battle, by force alone. He appears indifferent to wealth. Nevertheless, prudence often outweighs force. Show yourself to be a pious man, and perhaps he will join you.

Brother Tomaz

190 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	4"		8	Attached, Captain, Exclusive (Units without other Characters), Fanatical Devotion , Fearless, Light Troops, Officially Not A Miracle , Shepherding the Flock
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	4	4	0	Aegis (5+), Resistance
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Brother Tomaz	2	4	4	1	4	Divine Attacks, Repent! , Human

Model Rules

Fanatical Devotion: Models in Brother Tomaz's unit benefit from Regeneration (6+), and model parts without Mount benefit from Hatred.

Officially Not A Miracle: The Rank-and-File Health Pool Brother Tomaz is joined to Raises 1 HP at the start of each friendly Magic Phase.

Repent!: +1 Att, Crush Attack.

Shepherding the Flock: Brother Tomaz can join Flagellants as if he was Unstable.

As long as he is joined to Flagellants, he is Unstable.

Highborn Elves (HE)

Master Arcanadh, the Asfad Scholar

Master Arcanadh was the Headmaster of Asfada, widely regarded as the greatest center of scholarship in the world. He had earned that position after codifying the scriptures for Scrolls of the Pearl Throne and having improved the Sigils of Protection. Under his direction, scores of disciplined and organised researchers worked in vast libraries where knowledge - arcane and mundane alike - had accumulated for millennia, alongside charts, maps, and the secret reports of the Grey Watchers.

Then, forty three years ago in 919 A.S., Asfada suffered a disaster few believed possible. Led by the jarl Harald Redstub, a daring sea raid brought Åsklander warriors to the Arandai shores. Once there, they progressed swiftly inland, killing and pillaging mercilessly. They sacked the main temple of Asfada before the Highborn authorities could muster forces to repel them. The northlanders did not wait for them and boarded their ships, rejoicing in their unexpected success.

Among many riches, the raiders had stolen the temple's most precious relic, the Shroud of Marithar, the Phantom Queen. Unable to pursue the Åsklanders before reaching their home, the Highborn expedition sacked every coastal village they could and destroyed every last northern longship in search of their precious artefact. Alas, the Shroud and Harald Redstub had already vanished.

The Highborn queen was outraged and many senior officials fell from grace, Arcanadh among them. Humiliated by his inability to anticipate and counter the raid, Arcanadh reportedly sought the only viable path to redemption and gathered a research party, dedicated to recover the holy Shroud.

The search for the Shroud would become much more difficult than anticipated, as Harald met his end on an obscure battlefield in the middle of raiding. In accordance with Åskland tradition, he was buried with all his possessions under a landmark named Mag Ulfinn. Due to the battle being of little significance other than Harald's death, its precise location was lost.

Arcanadh's team has the advantage of reliable intelligence from the Grey Watchers, who excel in gathering information in approaching foes. Meanwhile, Arcanadh himself is considered one of the most adept spellcasters of the Highborn and always comes equipped with multiple artefacts and scrolls in order to control the battle of magic. Curiously, he pays particular attention to magical objects, seeking to bring them back to his temple. His troops are ordered to apprehend any wizard they come across and strip them of their belongings. One such wizard I spoke to told me that upon realising he wasn't a threat, they let him go but made sure to take his great grandfather's staff, Arcanadh reportedly telling him "This artefact belongs in a temple".

Despite his best efforts, the Shroud remains missing and the queen remains displeased with his lack of results. Perhaps in an effort to produce fast results or perhaps out of frustration, Arcanadh has seemingly abandoned the element of subtlety. As such, other parties, noticing his efforts, have begun a search themselves. The race for Harald Redstub's skull will determine who will reclaim the precious Shroud that lies beside him.

Arcanadh's mission is important enough that he would surely not decline the help of talented swords for hire. And should you unearth the Shroud yourself, you would hold in your hand a royal ransom.

Master Arcanadh, the Asfad Scholar

650 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	5"		9	Asfada Headmaster, Asfad Scholar , Channel (1), Commander of the Veil , Disciplined, Light Troops, Master of Spellcrafting, Shroud Seekers
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	5	3	0
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Arcanadh	1	5	3	0	5	Elf

Wizard Conclave

Asfada Headmaster: The Headmasters knowledge is so vast he is a Wizard Conclave (8) all by himself. *Note: He has a total of Channel (3)

- Altered Sight (Cosmology)
- Truth of Time (Cosmology)
- Weal and Woe (Cosmology)
- Cosmic Scales (Cosmology)
- Foresight (Divination)
- Immortal's Bane (Divination)
- The Stars Align (Divination)
- Augury of Triumph (Divination)
- Favour of Meladys (Hereditary Spell)

Model Rules

Asfad Scholar: The model gains Channel (1).

The Range of the Wizard's Learned Spells is increased by 6".

Aura spells gain +3" Range instead, while spells with type 'Caster' are unaffected.

Commander of the Veil: Arcanadh is equipped with the following Magic Items:

Obsidian Rock, Potion of Power Preservation, and Scroll of Power.

These Magic Items cannot be taken by other friendly models.

Shroud Seekers: All friendly units gain +1 Defensive Skill and +1 Offensive Skill when in contact with an enemy unit containing a Magic Item.

Dhaenala, the Wyrmkín

Dhaenala was said to be the finest warrior of her generation. The daughter of a noble Ryman family, she took an unusual path for a young lady and joined the local regiment, driven by the duty to protect her people. There, she quickly rose to the rank of Major, leading the 717th Mounted Dragoons. In 922 A.S., her regiment earned the Distinguished Imperial Cross during the conquest of the formerly Brezanne island of Calperon. That day she earned the highly coveted Queen Heart Medal. The next year, she was selected to join the Queen's Cavaliers and within three years, she received from the Queen's hands what would become her emblematic weapon, the Tear Lance.

These feats alone would have fulfilled any dreams of glory for most Arandai families, and Dhaenala was bound to reach the top of the military hierarchy in a mere century or two. However, her ascension was unexpectedly halted in the year of 930 A.S., when the fleet port at The String islands was sacked by the Dread Elves.

Based on court martial reports, Dhaenala dismissed her orders to patrol the dockyard, a vital component of the Arandai naval superiority in the area, in order to evacuate civilians. After having personally helped evacuate a large family to a nearby cliff, Dhaenala looked back at the ongoing battle. Her own company fell to enemy blades as the other companies stayed still, watching from their fortified positions at the dockyard. Reportedly angered at her "hapless comrades", she shouted "Fight like a Highborn!". After this, witnesses reported rocks rolling down the cliff, revealing a cave and the head of an awoken dragon.

The beast climbed the cliff and stopped next to the major. To meet a dragon is the pinnacle of anyone's lifetime, that inspires for most mortals an irrepressible terror. Yet Dhaenala's courage held strong as she placed herself between the dragon and the family she had helped, in a last effort to intimidate it. As they looked at each other, unflinching as the flames from the town illuminated the pair, something between them unmistakable changed.

The dragon was known as Balûruth. She had met the Highborn many ages past, after they had first settled on Celeda Ablan. She then took the legendary hero Thellilath as her rider during the Age of War, when the Queen's loyal subjects repelled the Silexian rebels. Then, for 1300 years, she remained in dormancy. Dhaenala's shout awakened her and she recognised Dhaenala as strong a soul as her former rider.

The battle of The String was suddenly interrupted as the thunderous roar of Balûruth echoed over the fires and shouting. Dhaenala directed the dragon's breath to the Dathen ships, burning and sinking one after another, causing the invaders to hurry back to their ships and retreat.

Dhaenala was heralded as a hero by the soldiers. Yet her commanders had her court-martialed for her disobedience. Even before her title was stripped, Dhaenala had lost faith in hierarchy and decided to shape her own future. Ever since, whenever the pair encounter a threat on Highborn troops, they rush and attack relentlessly, without permission.

Firmly astride the dragon, still wielding her iconic lance, Dhaenala is a force to be reckoned with. However, her ruthlessness and lack of command may be taken advantage of by a clever commander.

Dhaenala, the Wyrmling

750 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 100×150 mm

Height 5

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	7"		10	Ancient Allies (1), Disciplined, Fly, Queen's Cavalier , Rogue Heroine , Solitary, Swiftstride, Terror
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	8	6	6	4	Resistance (Flaming Attacks)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Dhaenala Wyrmling	4	8	4	1	8	The Lance of Tears , Elf , Metal Armour
Balûruth	6	6	7	4	3	Breath Attack (Str 4, AP 1, Flaming Attacks), Scourge of Fleets , Stomp Attack (D6 hits), Beast , Dragon , Mount

Model Rules

Queen's Cavalier: The bearer gains First Strike (+1 Att, +1 Off) and the bearer's unit may reroll failed Charge Range rolls.

If the model has Height 5, Regal Dragons and Ancient Dragons replace their Ancient Allies (2) rule with Ancient Allies (1), and Phoenixes replace Ancient Allies (1) with Ancient Allies (2).

Rogue Heroine: The model gains Fearless and Frenzy, and is unaffected by Beacon of Courage.

Scourge of Fleets: Balûruth gains Grind Attack (D6 hits, Str 4, AP 1, Flaming Attacks).

The Lance of Tears: Lance. The model gains Afflict (-1 Dis), Dhaenala gains +1 Att and Fury and Hatred.

In addition, she loses 1 Attack at the end of every Game Turn in which she was NOT Engaged in Combat. Duration: Permanent.

Infernal Dwarves (ID)

Abazzalem, the Mechanical Lamassu

A few years ago, when I came across a book by an author named Abazzalem, entitled "The Riddle Is Mightier Than The Sword", I had no idea that my esteemed fellow author lived in a citadel. Indeed, among the Infernal Dwarves, shunning the brutality of their acts and indifferent to the harshness of their laws, live strange relatives of the sphinxes, the lamassu. They are renowned for their wisdom, to such an extent that some of them have written philosophical treatises. In the introduction to his essay, Abazzalem recounts how he combined his philosophy of non-violence with the strict application of a contract.

In 948 A.S., what would later be known as the Conflict at the Desert Station took place. Railroad engineers from Nedzhid, the citadel where Abazzalem lived, undertook the construction of a western extension of the Steel Road, making its way towards Taphria. Before long, they found that the road was blocked by a towering sphinx. Try as they might, the dwarves were unable to move it, be it by diplomacy or force.

A different approach was required. The Steel Road delegation asked Abazzalem for advice. He demanded to speak to the sphinx in person but the delegation refused. According to the contract, the new Steel Road was to be opened by an Infernal Engine, and an Infernal Engine alone. They went to see the citadel's vizier, who refused the amendment and reminded the engineers of the penalties. Seeing no other way, Abazzalem declared: "Transform me into an Engine. I will open the Road".

The engineers studied, consulted, and eventually devised a viable plan. It was possible. But once the surgery was underway, there would be no return. If he survived. Abazzalem was resolute and the plan went ahead after the vizier added a tenfold increase of the contractual penalties, should the lamassu die.

Thus, the lamassu was converted. Through steel and fire, a new body of metal was molded, one that would be permanently affixed to an Infernal Engine. Through much suffering, Abazzalem lived. He could no longer fly and could barely move his remaining limbs, but what he lost in mobility, he gained in resilience. The peaceful lamassu refused to carry any weapons, willing to spare lives and relying only on his wits. Abazzalem set out alone on the unfinished Western Steel Road.

A week later, he returned. When asked if he had killed the sphinx, he replied: "No. I riddled her." By triumphing in a battle of wits, the sphinx moved, and thus the final obstacle was cleared.

Unfortunately for Abazzalem, although the surgery was successful, he found that his new body was slowly poisoning him. Each sleep was more restless than the last. Each breath filled his blackened lungs with less air. His time is now short. Fate is not feared by the lamassu and so Abazzalem decided to use his wisdom to aid his people for as long as he could.

Well protected by his nigh-impenetrable armour, he harangues and riddles the fiercest of combatants, throwing even the most steadfast warrior off-guard. This strange and mystical tactic has an undeniable advantage of allowing him to seize the initiative in a charge. And if there's one advice that even a child could give, it would be that you would do best not to stand in the way of a moving train.

Abazzalem, the Mechanical Lamassu

700 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 60×100 mm
Height 5

The unit counts towards 'Instruments of Destruction'.

Global	Cha	Mob	Dis	Model Rules
	4"	5"	9	Fearless, Full Steam Ahead! Full Steam Ahead! Full Steam Ahead! , Solitary, Stubborn, Terror, The Riddle of Peace , Unstable, Wizard Master
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	8	1	8	4
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Abazzalem	2	4	5	2	4	Magical Attacks
Chassis			5	2	2	Devastating Charge (+1 Str, +1 AP, +10 Agi), Grind Attack (3D3 hits), Construct , Metal Armour

— Magic Options —

pts—

Witchcraft

— Model Rules —

Full Steam Ahead! Full Steam Ahead!: The model cannot choose to Pursue, unless it is its First Round of Combat and it is Charging. In that case, it must Pursue (including Overrun).

The Riddle of Peace: During Pre-game Selections, select a single Character on the opponent's Army List. Any unit containing the selected Character suffers from Minimised (Charge Range Roll).

Ibat-Sokavum, the Flying Charioteer

You can never be too wary of a lawyer. Especially of a Lugarite who tricked no fewer than four Kadims into his personal service.

As my Infernal correspondent explained to me, in the year 926 A.S., a Lugarite named Ibat-Sokavum was finalizing his personal pact of merging with a Kadim. To his own surprise, the fire elemental signed hastily, without fully examining the lesser clauses. Thus, many provisions intended to be removed as bargaining concessions during negotiations were retained and became binding, including giving Ibat-Sokavum unrestricted access to the Kadim's mind. This is how Ibat-Sokavum acquired, inter alia, unparalleled control over the Kadim.

At that time, there were disturbing anomalies flickering in the Veil, noticed by many sorcerers from around the world. The Kadim revealed to Ibat-Sokavum that these were a sign of a war in the Immortal Realm and that Kadim were starting to flee, seeking the protection offered by a binding pact, which kept them out of the daemons' reach. Learning this, Ibat-Sokavum "generously" offered similar "protection" to other Kadims.

While Ibat-Sokavum was physically unable to merge with more Kadim, he was clever enough to devise other arrangements that desperate Kadim would agree to. Ibat-Sokavum offered a seemingly common contract to two Kadim to pull his chariot, and another contract for one more to be hosted in the chariot itself, named Nezibrutash. The three Kadim were as eager to sign as the first one, seemingly unaware of the exploits they would soon be called upon to perform as part of their contracts. When Ibat-Sokavum asked his chariot to fly, they realised their mistake and told their kin to be more cautious, but for them it was too late; the signed contracts were binding.

His new pull beasts were also forced to reveal what their kin experienced in the immortal realm, and they predicted a large breach in the Veil would appear over the Inferno. As time was of the essence, Ibat-Sokavum gathered his colleagues from the Temple of Lugar in Vanebvikh, just in time to encounter hordes of Kadim fleeing the Inferno. The many deals signed that day thus gave rise to an imposing army of Infernal Dwarves, more than ready to fight the legions of Daemons that were now bursting into the mortal realm to pursue the Kadim.

Ibat-Sokavum led the final counterattack, famously shouting "Follow me to the Gates of Hell!". That day, the daemons were repelled, Vanebvikh was preserved and Ibat-Sokavum was rewarded the powerful Blivet Lance, along with eternal glory. To this day, he remains the only dwarf to have ever driven a flying chariot, a trick no Kadim would agree to sign again, given the toll that magical flight takes on their mortal bodies.

With his new mighty transport and his new command over Kadim, Ibat-Sokavum now takes advantage of the validity years remaining in the contracts to push the interests of the Infernal Dwarves wherever possible. The flying chariot can prove handy for ramming a tall opponent in the head, such as giants, which it has done twice already.

While it's well known that Infernal Dwarves are no strangers to hiring mercenaries, I cannot overstate the importance of being utterly cautious when signing a contract with Ibat-Sokavum, lest you too find yourself in his service for centuries.

Ibat-Sokavum, the Flying Charioteer

540 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 60×100 mm

Height 4

Global	Cha	Mob	Dis	Model Rules
	7"	4"	10	Fly, General, Helm of Kadim Command , Light Troops, Solitary, Swiftstride
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	5	7	5	4	Aegis (3+, against Flaming Attacks), Aegis (4+), Burning Armour , Infernal Armour
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Ibat-Sokavum	4	7	4	1	4	First Strike (Hatred), Flaming Attacks, Magical Attacks, Blivet Lance , Dwarf , Metal Armour
Winged Kadim (2)	2	3	5	2	4	Flaming Attacks, Magical Attacks, Volcanic Embrace (2), Kadim , Metal Armour , Mount
Nezibrutash			5	2		Flaming Attacks, Impact Hits (D6+2 hits), Construct

Model Rules

Blivet Lance: Lance. Devastating Charge (+5 Agi). Attacks with the Blivet Lance ignore negative modifiers to to-hit rolls.

Burning Armour: Each time a Standard Melee Attack allocated against Ibat-Sokavum results in a to-hit roll of '1', the attacking model's Health Pool suffers a hit with Str 4, AP 0, Automatic Hits and Flaming Attacks.

Helm of Kadim Command: Model parts with Kadim in friendly units within 12" of Ibat-Sokavum gain First Strike (Hatred (against Weakness (Flaming Attacks))).

Kingdom of Equitaine (KoE)

King Henry the Young

At a mere 18 years of age, he was thrust into the responsibility of leading one of the world's wealthiest kingdoms. His father, King Luis the Meek, reigned for only eight disastrous years, during which he lost Avras to the rebellion of General Fontaine, saw Matthias the Pious of Sonnstahl make a powerful alliance with Destria and lost the Battle of Moitiers to the very same rival. The high nobles were openly disputing his authority when he died and nobody had high hopes for the heir.

However, King Henry has already proven his arm to be worth more than most seasoned knights. He first gained the respect of his men as a mere 16-year-old prince, famously putting his own life on the line while holding off the final Sonnstahler attack in the Battle of Moitiers, shouting "Embroychons ces cochons" (let's skewer these pigs) as he charged, allowing for the safe retreat of his troops. This battle prowess was put to the test before his coronation as he was challenged to a duel by Duke Gabriel de Gasconne, the influential leader of the nobles who contested Henry's reign. He slew him in the courtyard of his castle in front of dozens of witnesses, thoroughly silencing any would-be challenger to his throne.

These two experiences appear to have forged Henry's view of his kingdom: a land where loyal farmers would put down their lives for men whose nobility was truly in name only. And so his first decisions as king showed the soul of a man of action. He is fostering an Equitaine where nobility comes from deeds, not from blood. A land where young squires could prove their worth and the most valorous commoners could rise to nobility.

To his men, he is a hero of the people and a king who leads by example. Henry is not the king to command a battlefield from the comfort of his throne, but one who draws first blood, inspiring the lowborn to fight like him. The nobility of old would say they fight only for the chance of being noticed by the young king in a vain attempt of being "artificially" promoted to nobility. There's no denying that Henry's presence on the battlefield embodies the ancient maxim: "better a lion leading an army of sheep than an army of lions following a sheep".

Henry himself is a capable fighter, despite his inexperience and perceived recklessness. The lance he thrusts, named Daralard, is said to have been given by the Lady Goddess herself, along with a mesmerising breastplate that seems to divert even the mightiest of blows. Yet, his most cherished gift remains his loyal steed Grivayant, one of the finest royal stallions that Equitaine may breed. Few are ever likely to see such a splendid horse even once in their life.

Despite its wealth, mercenaries traditionally have little business with the Kingdom of Equitaine, considering it a great dishonour to delegate duties of war onto others. However, after only two years at the throne, it seems that King Henry the Young is looking to change a great many things. Such undertakings are certainly noble, but also carry great risk. Whether he will go down in history as King Henry the Great or perhaps the Reckless is for fate to decide.

King Henry the Young

480 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 25×50 mm

Height 2

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	8"		9	Disciplined, General, Lance Formation, New Guard , Our Brave King , Swiftstride
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	6	4	4	Aegis (6+), Fae Breasplate , Nobility, Shield
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
King Henry the Young	4	6	4	1	6	Feyforged Lance , Human , Metal Armour
Grivaillant	1	3	4	0	3	Mount

Model Rules

Fae Breasplate: +1 Arm and Distracting (1).

Feyforged Lance: Lance. Devastating Charge (+2 Att), Lethal Strike, and Zeal

New Guard: Dukes cannot be taken in an Army List containing King Henry the Young.

In addition, friendly units containing a Folk Hero with Castellan benefit from +1 Mob.

Our Brave King: Combats containing a friendly unit where the Rank-and-File models contains Commonfolk within 12" of King Henry the Young gain a bonus to Static Combat Resolution equal to the number of unsaved wounds inflicted by King Henry the Young in the current Melee Phase.

This does not apply to Combats King Henry is a part of.

Hernaut Le Rouquin

Hernaut Le Rouquin became a popular Quin - a professional trickster - during the reign of King Luis. As the weak king failed to prevent the orgulous dukes from abusing their power and excessively exploiting the commoners, public disdain steadily grew, something that the charismatic Hernaut soon made a career out of. He would appear at fairs around the kingdom to ridicule the false virtues of the nobility, seduce the daughters of the nobles with his long red hair, only to disappear as the guardsmen came to have him arrested.

Not content with simply badmouthing the incompetence of the nobles, Hernaut saw fit to use his skills to commit minor burglaries and heists, robbing entire kitchens and wine cellars, bringing those goods to hungry peasants. These feats not only increased his reputation but also the stories told about him. At each fair, the crowds he drew increased and the stories and songs of his escapades spread far and wide to the dismay of the nobility as their reputation changed from noble protectors of the realm to old fools who couldn't even safekeep their wheels of cheese.

As Hernaut's reputation grew, he set his eyes on the king himself, seeking to humiliate him in person during one of the royal feasts. He even went as far as to announce this mission at a public fair. To accomplish this, he would have to sneak into the royal courtyard during such a feast. An impossible task, considering his intent was known. Yet the king was reportedly stunned when one of his guards stepped onto a table, removed his armour and revealed himself to be Hernaut. After a brief yet resounding humiliation, Hernaut swiftly departed, chased by the king's guards. The guards say that he managed to evade capture with the help of the Fey. The high nobles were instead swift to put the blame on Luis' incompetence.

With the reign of King Henry the Young, it seems that Hernaut has taken a turn in his career by joining local militias defending the kingdom. While Hernaut could hardly be counted among the strong knights that Equitaine is renowned for, his cunning and trickery have proven decisive more than once. Hernaut excels at taunting the glory hounds among the enemy, sending them in a hopeless chase after the redheaded scoundrel.

Most famously, he prevented the Destrians from ravaging Ciélac. The bandit gang led by Perot "lo Lladre" Roqueguinart was a prominent band, pillaging towns and abbeys close to the Destrian border. As they approached Ciélac, lo Lladre offered the people safe passage in exchange for allowing his men to loot without resistance. Hernaut and a small troop of peasants stepped forward to deny his request, thoroughly mocking the bandit and his ill-suited hat, to the point where a feverous chase ensued and before long, the bandits found themselves surrounded. Disarmed, stripped of weapons, boots, and dignity, they were forced back across the Crimson Peaks. Hernaut famously gave the hat of "Little Perot" to a local child, claiming it was a far better fit. After that, lo Lladre's gang was never seen again.

As you have surely surmised, while Hernaut Le Rouquin is not likely to take your life, unlike the many monsters, heroes and assassins of this world, he may well take something even more important: your reputation.

Hernaut Le Rouquin

260 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	4"		8	"Borrowed" Steed , Hidden, Infuriating Wit , Wizard Adept
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	4	4	2	Aegis (6+), Afflict (Pursuit Distance is always 0"), Commonfolk, Leprechaun Companion
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Hernaut Le Rouquin	2	4	4	1	4	Human, Metal Armour

— Magic Options —

pts

Witchcraft

— Model Rules —

"Borrowed" Steed: Immediately before choosing a unit to join using the Hidden rule, Hernaut may gain a "Destrier" mount for free, without any upgrades.

Infuriating Wit: Maximised (Charge Range rolls) towards any unit containing Hernaut.

Leprechaun Companion: Each Standard Melee Attack allocated against Hernaut that fails its to-hit roll is instead allocated towards the attacking model's Health Pool with Automatic Hits.

Ogre Khans (OK)

Ganzorig Ironbond

Among the ogre mercenaries, the ironbound Ganzorig is famed for his unwavering sense of duty to his contracts. Whatever job he accepts, he fulfills his part to the letter, no matter how disproportionate. This sheer tenacity and determination have made him a legend on no less than three continents.

His first contract is famous among Silk Road caravanserais. With a lack of first-hand sources, the story may be embellished but it nonetheless reveals his character. It is said that at the age of nineteen, Ganzorig was hired as a simple caravan guard along the Silk Road. When bandits ambushed the caravan, Ganzorig rallied the guards and the bandits were beaten back. The bandit chieftain, humiliated, spent his entire fortune hiring local cultists to summon dozens of daemons. Ganzorig remained steadfast. Sustaining many wounds, he struck down one daemon after another until he reached the chieftain himself and pummelled him in a duel. Before dying, the chieftain asked Ganzorig what he was fighting for so fiercely. The emphatic reply was: "Food. Two copper a day. And my honour."

Other tales are even more fantastical. He claims to have been willingly swallowed by a leviathan, which had also eaten the cargo of furs he was tasked to transport. The story goes that he killed the beast from the inside and brought every single fur out of its belly. The merchant who had contracted him was displeased, given that the furs were drenched in blood and threatened to nullify the contract unless Ganzorig personally cleaned every last piece. However, the condition of the furs was never part of the contract, and so the merchant ended up with a broken arm and several missing teeth before paying what he owed.

Ganzorig once lost his mercenaries to the last in Taphria. He returned alone. Without saying as much as a word, he hired some fresh troops and went back. The season was over but the mission was completed. The owner tried to bargain the fee, but ended up losing all his estate, a small portion paying the mercenaries and the rest being destroyed. On another occasion, the caravan he was escorting ran out of food; his ogres devoured the camels and ended up transporting the entire cargo to their destination themselves.

It would seem that Ganzorig values honesty and determination over experience or equipment. As such his troops often come from the young blood, eager for glory alongside the legendary mercenary. This has the benefit of his rates being rather affordable for someone of his reputation. His sense of honour dictates only one thing: the end result, not how it was achieved. The invariable conclusion of his contracts is "Mission complete. Pay me".

He is arguably among the bravest and most doggedly determined ogres alive. Conversely, courage in excess becomes foolishness, and his determination to complete the mission at any cost has led many down the path of defeat. Yet, here is a being that is very much like you in that he's a reliable sword for hire. In a profession where loyalties are often put to the test, he's proven to be a very reliable ally. Perhaps you may find common ground and work together. With your brains and his brawn, who knows what you may achieve

Ganzorig Ironbond

500 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 40×40 mm

Height 3

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	6"		9	Been There, Done That. , Disciplined, General, Get the Job Done! , Light Troops, Stubborn, Young Mercenaries
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm	Resistance
	5	6	5	4
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Ganzorig	5	6	5	2	4	Impact Hits (D3 hits), Stomp Attack (1 hit), Weapon Master, Brace of Ogre Pistols (4+), Great Weapon, Halberd, Hunting Spear (3+), Iron Fist, Ogre Crossbow (3+), Paired Weapons, Metal Armour, Ogre

Model Rules

Been There, Done That.: Every friendly unit of Mercenary Veterans and Mercenary Gunners gains Bodyguard (Ganzorig). In addition, when joined to one of these units, Ganzorig benefits from any Extraordinary Model Rule upgrades the unit has.

Get the Job Done!: One use only. During 'Calculate Final Combat Score' (Round of Combat, step 4.B), Ganzorig may Recover up to 2 Health Points and adds +2 Combat Resolution to his side.

Young Mercenaries: All friendly Bruiser model parts in an army containing Ganzorig benefit from First Strike (Fury), as long as he is on the Battlefield.

Valish, the Chefling

Culinary prestige is rarely the first consideration when discussing ogres. Many of their kin are happy to simply grill a donkey's leg over a fire, or even eat it raw. In actuality, food is a vital part of ogre culture, with food often serving as a basis for social status; the most prestigious ogres out-eating the competition during grand feasts, and the rich among them seeking a wholly carnivorous diet.

There is even a sacred site at a spring where steppes meet mountains, where a meat stew brews in a gigantic cauldron, with new ingredients being added as the stew is handed out. This not only serves as physical nutrition; the act of eating from the same stew your ancestors did is also considered nourishment for your spirit. This stew is tended to by a cook, who serves for life and then passes the hat to his or her chosen successor. It's a role as prestigious as it is rare. And so, imagine the shock when one day, a puny scrapling was chosen as the cook tending to the Stew of Perpetuity.

Valish is a halfling from western Augea who served as an assistant to the ogre Balganym who had managed the Stew of Perpetuity for 50 long years. In her old and forgetful days, she truly began to notice how much Valish knew, with a lauded "unwavering" memory of cooking techniques and recipes he had acquired from the books and diaries of the legendary ogre cook Eru, who ages ago first lit the fire under the giant cauldron.

And so upon Balganym's retirement, Valish received his mentor's hat, which he wore proudly like a cloak. Although initially he was not kindly received by the ogres, his masterful stew quickly warmed their bodies and hearts to the point where he was not only accepted, but appreciated, something inconceivable to any other scrapling.

However, this also gave him another responsibility; one that he feared: aiding khans in decisive battles for conquest. Using potions and sacred herbs, he would create what the ogres referred to as Battlestew: a spicy, powerful meal that would fuel the ogres' rightful fury. This would normally entail the cook dragging a smaller cauldron by hand into combat. Valish had to put his ingenuity to work as he had his underlings construct a scrap chariot, large enough to carry Battlestew and also protect him from enemy attacks. If the battle was won, the khan that had requested Valish's aid would have to pay him back by regularly shipping local ingredients to the Stew of Perpetuity. Ogres believe it is their destiny to conquer the world and as such, the stew gradually changes, from a stew of the steppes and mountains to a Stew of the Universe.

The presence of a halfling cook who seems to be honoured and afforded special protection has not gone unnoticed by the ogres' enemies. Considering the power of Battlestew, the mere rumour of having the legendary halfling cook with them is enough to deter most foes. However, with mere scraps for personal protection, the halfling is no fighter. So long as you can withstand the anger of the ogres, killing Valish himself might well be the key to victory.

Valish, the Chefling

250 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 40×80 mm

Height 3

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	6"		6	Attached, Eru's Secret Recipes , Ghost Pepper , Gone but not Forgotten , War Platform
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	5	3	5	3
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Valish	1	2	2	0	3	Halfling
Stir Master	4	5	5	2	4	Grind Attack (1 hit), Ogre
Chassis			4	1		Impact Hits (1 hit), Construct

Model Rules

Eru's Secret Recipes: At the start of each friendly Player Turn, pick one of the following to affect the Chefling's unit.
Duration: One Turn.

- Bluehoove Goat Stew: +2 Mob, Strider
- Trollbear Goulash: Regeneration (6+), Recover a single HP on a Rank-and-File model in the Chefling's unit.
- Stonecold Soup: Channel (1), Courageous, and Disciplined

Ghost Pepper: During each friendly Shooting Phase, select a single model part in the Chefling's unit: it gains Breath Attack (Str 3, AP 0). Duration: One Phase.

Gone but not Forgotten: If Valish is removed as a casualty, all friendly model parts with Ogre gain Hatred (against the unit that caused Valish to be removed as a casualty*). Duration: Permanent.

* This includes all models joined to it.

Orcs and Goblins (OnG)

Lerrgog, the Smart Troll

Over the past fifteen years, numerous reports have been received of a particularly unusual troll, described as a leader. Not only of other trolls, but of all warborn. He goes simply by the name Lerrgog.

The information about him comes from a goblin whose cousin was a second-hand witness, so take it for what it's worth. This account begins with the Garden of the Golden Scorpion, located somewhere deep in Naptesh. They had sent a lumber of cave trolls against a Dread Elf settlement rumoured to exist in the area. The plan did not go well. Most trolls were slain and any survivors were enslaved and sold to a local vermin outpost under the control of House Fetthis. There, the trolls were pricked and goaded by the vile vermin, used as guinea pigs for twisted experiments.

Soon, the goblins launched a rescue operation. This plan did not work either. Goblins were massacred and their leaders captured. Among them was an old witch who was thrown into a cage with one of the trolls. As the weeks turned into months, this witch devised yet another plan involving a small calabash of goga he had managed to conceal. One night, he poured the brew into the mouth of the troll as he slept. This troll was Lerrgog.

For some reason, perhaps due to the various toxins introduced by the vermin experiments, the goga did not have the intended effect. Instead, the troll went into a delirium. But slowly, his mind seemed to acquire a new clarity and unexpected sharpness. Dots began to connect in the troll's mind. Lerrgog decided he could save his kind from captivity. Having figured out how to free himself from the unsuspecting rodents, he bided his time until the moment was right. Cages were broken and arms acquired and in a single night, the trolls were free and the vermin perished. After all the cunning plans of the goblins, it was the plan of a troll who finally brought success.

Once free, the trolls stayed with Lerrgog, for he had found something no other troll had ever found before: a purpose. Lerrgog refused to return to his home garden. Instead, he and his band began a grand journey across the Augean Near-East. After the vermin, they attacked the elves, ultimately fulfilling the goals of the goblins' initial plan. The elves had gathered many slaves and Lerrgog left none of them in chains: the warborn were freed, and all the others, who couldn't stand the trolls' smell, were killed. After the elves, they turned to the Infernal Dwarves, where the largest contingents of warborn are held in slavery.

For several years, they have sown confusion in the region and restored a sense of warborn pride among former mind-broken slaves. He has become regarded as a shining symbol of hope for the slaves, and a name to curse in the Infernal Citadels.

Lerrgog is easily spotted. You will see him as crippled, since the experiments he endured in his captivity left him lame; his lower right arm has been replaced by a spiked club, which also serves as a cane. As he seems to have little concern for the riches left in the wake of his crusades, it seems likely that you could strike very favourable deals with this Lerrgog. After all: How smart is a smart troll

Lerrgog, the Smart Troll

380 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 40×40 mm

Height 3

Global	Cha	Mob	Dis	Model Rules
	4"	6"	8	Fearless, General, Higher Standards , Strider (Ruins), Troll's Bellow
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	4	4	5	3	Regeneration (4+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Lerrgog	3	4	5	2	2	Ironmaul Limb , Troll Toll , Troll

Model Rules

Higher Standards: Rank and File units containing Troll in an Army List containing Lerrgog are upgraded with a Standard Bearer. Duration: Permanent. This affects Battle Preparations.

Ironmaul Limb: Each time Troll Toll's effect is triggered, Lerrgog performs two Standard Melee Attacks instead of a single one.

Troll's Bellow: When you activate the War Cry!, all friendly model parts with Troll gain Fury. Duration: One Turn.

Troll Toll: Each time a the bearer model with Troll Toll loses a health Health point Point after failling a Regeneration Save against an enemy Melee Attack, ~~the it can model part with Troll Toll may~~ immediately perform a Standard Melee Attack towards the Health Pool of the model that caused the wound.

This attack is resolved at the end of the same Agility Step, before any casualties are removed, and does not count against the maximum number of attacks the model with Troll Toll Troll Toll can make due to Restricted Attacks.

Mokrog, the Only King?

The story of the Only King goes back to even the Dawn Age. He is an ancient hero of the Warborn, who is periodically reincarnated to unify their people. It is said that when The Only King returns, entire nations tremble. The Only King is said to always be born as a brood of one. This very rare event is, for orcs, a dramatic horror and an auspicious omen, for unlike other orcs, they are truly alone. Such was the fate of Mokrog.

According to my sources, the orc warlord was born as the sole survivor of a hatching pit devastated by a great fire. A brood of one, rising from the flames would undoubtedly be seen as a strong symbol. As a brood of one, however, he was only ever an outcast in the tribe that adopted him.

His fate would change after he participated in the famous Games of Zagjan, where broods from many tribes compete yearly to determine the worthiest brood. The Games consist of various challenges, requiring strength, agility, riding skill and cooperation. He competed alone, against broods of dozens or more. Somehow, he managed to win the Games. Twice. This astonishing feat convinced orcs around the world that Mokrog was blessed by Zagjan, another sign of The Only King. Several broods came to him, and asked to join him. His own tribe of Warborn was formed. With newfound power, his exploits continued to draw attention.

He is also regarded as a charismatic leader, known among orcs for his wise words that seem to change from day to day. Orcs often debate and even fight over which of Mokrog's many wisdoms is the wisest. Some of his most famous include:

"Today is today",

"The bigger the axe, the harder the axe axes",

or

"If you die, then strike back first and then die"

Rudimentary or nonsensical as they may seem, proverbs are not part of orc culture and may indeed be a sign of them forming around a single, powerful leader. From all I have collected, Mokrog is indeed powerful. Physically, he dominates other orcs, whether when he is on foot or riding his grunter Tabetha, named after the one he rode during the Games of Zagjan. Since these games, when his mount dies, he calls the next one in the same manner; at the time of my writing, this is his 41st. Given the mortality rate of said mounts, it's no surprise that Mokrog has engaged in an unequalled campaign of violence with countless feats, the most famous being when he slew a dragon with only the charred tusks of his fallen steed. Adding to his prestige, he seems capable of pyrokinesis, as if fire awakens a burning fury within him, reminiscent of the fire that forged him on the fateful day of his birth.

Mokrog's goal is simple: gather the largest warband in ages and crush the greatest enemy around. Many wonder if The Only King has truly returned. Only success would show it to be true. As with all orcs, his tactics are rudimentary, mostly limited to rushing towards the enemy and fighting fiercely. Exploited by a clever general, this could be his demise. Deny The Only King's return and his horde will flee before you.

Mokrog, the Only King?

500 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 25×25 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	4"		9	Chosen Warlord , Disciplined, Exclusive (Orc), General, Orc Horde , Stubborn, The Only King , Tribe Leader
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	7	5	3	Aegis (5+), Resistance (Flaming Attacks)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Mokrog	5	7	5	2	4	Born in Fire , Brood Rivalry, Fury, The bigger the Axe... , Metal Armour, Orc

— Mount Options (must choose one) — pts —

Light Troops

Tabetha 41

free

80

— Model Rules —

Born in Fire: During Combat Choices, Mokrog may gain Flaming Attacks. Duration: Round of Combat.

Chosen Warlord: Mokrog counts as an Orc Warlord for the purpose of War Cry!

Orc Horde: The model gains Fearless.

Units entirely with Orc do not cause Panic Test on units entirely with Orc when making Flee Moves through them.

The bigger the Axe...: Great Weapon. During Combat Choices, Mokrog may choose to gain either Hatred or Multiple Wounds (2). Duration: Round of Combat.

The Only King: All models in the Only King's unit benefit from Dying Blow.

In addition, if The Only King is removed as a casualty, all friendly units lose Brood Rivalry. This effect persists for the Duration of One Turn after Mokrog is removed as a casualty. This is an exception to the rule 4.C of the "Attacks" chapter: "Losing the Last Health Point".

Tabetha 41

Rarity: Legendary

Base 25×50 mm

Height 2

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	7"		C	Swiftstride
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	C	C	C	C+2
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Tabetha 41	1	3	4	1	2	Devastating Charge (+1 Str, +1 AP), Mount

The Splendid Leader

In the southern Barren Mountains lies The Enlightened Gardens of Ibridig, a confederacy home to uncountable thousands of goblins. I was told by a Goblin that in order to rule such a realm, one would require exceptional reputation and cunning, not to mention incredible brilliance, so much that it is impossible to think of a single goblin achieving that in history, except one: the charismatic darrmu, leading Ibridig, known exclusively by his official title: The Splendid Leader.

Extensive research has allowed me to gather surprising information about him and develop a theory to explain his many peculiarities. Like for all darrmu, many bitter rivals have attempted to take his life, hoping to claim the coveted seat for themselves. My records show that he has been poisoned, stabbed, squashed, crushed, thrown off a cliff, and even beheaded by daring goblin assassins sent from the neighbouring Gardens. Yet, time and again, he returned alive and well, always reclaiming his place as ruler. His discouraged contenders, unable to beat him, decided to join him one after the other. With each supposed death, the list of goblin chieftains cowed by him grew longer, until all the gardens of Ibridig submitted to his authority. As the tribes in the region rallied to his cause, their wealth became his, likely making him the richest goblin to ever live. Beyond this, he began sending his troops forth with the intent to extend further his hold on the Gardens across several continents.

Together, the joint federation has achieved remarkable feats, demonstrating the dangers of allowing too many goblins to cooperate, even forming an elite unit composed of the strongest goblins of the realm: The Splendid Bodyguards, who often carry their leader on a gloriously decorated palanquin.

As consistent reports affirm, the Splendid Leader is fair, favouring no Garden over another, not even his home Garden. As a result, his audience and influence are highly sought after by many local powers. Yet, few have the opportunity to see him in person, which further reinforces his legend and gravitas among his subordinates. He apparently wears an oversized ring on his left hand, with which he pompously affixes and seals his most important decrees. Numerous forgeries of this ring circulate, requiring that important decisions be confirmed multiple times before being implemented. What he does outside his public life remains a mystery to all, save for his large company of courtesans, which remains secret even by goblin standards.

The Splendid Leader is reportedly an excellent fighter on the battlefield, for a goblin. Try as you might, you will find that The Splendid Leader always comes back, cheered more than ever by his troops, amazed by his incredible talent for cheating death. However, it is well established that only the denizens beyond the veil have the gift of immortality. By all accounts, The Splendid Leader is not one. So what is the secret? By my reckoning, he is not one, but many: a group of nearly identical goblins who take turns being the leader.

As any goblin, The Splendid Leader is more than willing to let others take up arms for him, and he is rich enough to hire you for life. But do remember the old saying: "When a goblin speaks - he lies." This ought to apply twofold to The Splendid Leader whose very life is rooted in lies.

The Splendid Leader

230 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob	Dis	Model Rules
	4"	8	Attached, Beastie Whisperer , Brilliant Agitator , Darrmu , Disciplined , Exclusive (Goblin , Troll), Feigned Flight , General , Goblin Cunning , Goblin Gardens , Hit and Run , Still Kickin' , Stubborn

Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	3	4	2	Aegis (4+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Splendid Leader	4	4	4	2	5	Lance, Goblin, Metal Armour

— Mount Options (must choose one) — pts —

Beastie	free
Splendid Palanquin	free
Beastie Chariot	40

— Model Rules —

Beastie Whisperer: Immediately before choosing a unit to join using the Hidden rule, the model may gain a 'Beastie' mount without any upgrade for free. If the model joins a unit with at least one Rank-and-File model with Creepy-Crawlies, its mount also gains Creepy-Crawlies.

Brilliant Agitator: The Splendid Leader counts as a Goblin Demagogue for the purpose of War Cry!

Goblin Gardens:

Duration: Permanent.

During Pre-game Selections, you may choose any Terrain ('X') from: Field, Forest, Ruins, or Water Terrain.

All Terrain Features following the rules for 'X' are Dangerous Terrain (6+) instead of any other instance of Dangerous Terrain.

In addition, friendly models with Goblin gain Strider (X).

Still Kickin': At the beginning of any Player Turn after the Splendid Leader has been removed as a casualty, you can Summon a new Splendid Leader using the Hidden rule, with the following exceptions: you can select whether the new Splendid Leader will be mounted on a Beastie, the Splendid Palanquin or a Beastie Chariot before choosing the unit he appears in.

If the Splendid Palanquin is selected, ignore the Base Size limitation and select six Rank-and-File models in the unit to be joined instead of a single model. After choosing an eligible unit, remove the six Rank-and-File models so that the Splendid Leader is placed in the Front Rank, where the removed models were positioned.

The Splendid Palanquin

Rarity: Legendary

Base 60×40 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	4"		C
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	4	C	C	C+1
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Gogtuk Neophyte (4)	2	3	3	1	3	Halberd, Goblin, Light Armour, Mount

Saurian Ancients (SA)

Anurarch Destined

Rumours spread from far-off Virentia of an anurarch conqueror, along with claims that she is older than even the First Age. The most modest such story is as follows:

In the last days of the Dawn Age, when the world still trembled at the tyranny of the Saurians, there lived an anurarch novice known as Anurarch Watchful, slowly starting her journey towards ascension. Upon a lonely peak in Virentia, she tended to an ancient arcane engine, machinery of the ancient anurarchs that supposedly enhanced their magic prowess.

Then came the light of a dozen suns from the horizon. Moments later, the earth quaked and the summit upon which Watchful stood gave way. The young anurarch was entombed beneath an avalanche. As the air grew thin and her strength faded, she allowed herself to fall into deep hibernation, suspended between death and timeless sleep, her life just barely preserved by the machine.

Seven ages later, another cataclysmic event shook the world yet again, dislodging Anurarch Watchful's icy prison from the mountain, yet still buried under the snow. Another age passed. Then, at the turn of the Ninth Age, the sun began shining brighter. Year by year, the frozen prison shrank. And after another nine hundred years, Anurarch Watchful was fully thawed. After countless millennia, the anurarch awoke, to a world unrecognizable. She found no empire awaiting her, only scattered enclaves of saurian descendants who spoke her language as if through water, and whose inhabitants dared to question her authority. No longer guided by the wise hand of the anurarch, the world she now beheld was a fallen one. In dire need of being rekindled with its rightful master.

From this point, various sources of information build a consistent story. Through unrivaled mindcraft, she subdued those who defied her. Those who resisted most strongly were publicly executed. In time, she offered alliances to neighbouring enclaves, proclaiming a divine mission: to restore the glory of the ancient anurarch dominion. Henceforth she was no longer Watchful; she was Destined. While most saurians considered her a usurper and a liar, her message found ears with those who struggled, looking for powerful allies. But even those who cooperated would sooner or later face her authoritarian tendencies. Any voice that showed a hint of independence was quickly and violently disposed of, clearly fearing being usurped.

A scholar of the human mind at my university described what he believed to be the mindset of this creature thusly: imagine waking up in a world where your kingdom has been ravaged and only you held the key to restoring it. The rebirth or death of a nation resting on your shoulders. What emotions would rule over you?

Anurarch Destined displays a series of unique abilities. On the battlefield, she moves alone, protected by a machine that is hailed as channeling her mind into the skies themselves. She's highly adept in occult arts that are normally shunned for its anti-vitalist nature.

By all accounts, Anurarch Destined is ruthless, aggressive and relentless in her pursuits of power. But unlike other saurians, she is truly alone and behind her veneer of tyranny might lie exploitable emotions. Loneliness. Confusion. And Fear. Use this to your advantage and rely on your commanders. If the human spirit has shown us anything, it's that together we can overcome any monster.

Anurarch Destined

750 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 50×75 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob	Dis	Model Rules
	6"	8	Communal Bond, Eternal Mastery , Fearless, General, Greater Guiding Mastery , Light Troops, Like the Tyrants of Old , Solitary, Strider, Utterly Ruthless , Wizard Master
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	6	1	4	3	Regeneration (4+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi
					Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Destined	1	1	1	0	1
Grind Attack (D3+1 hits, Str 6, AP 2, Unmodifiable, Lightning Attacks), Storm Crystal , Anurarch

— Magic Options —

pts—

Occultism

— Model Rules —

Eternal Mastery: The model's Casting Rolls for Learned Spells gains a +1 modifier.

Eternity Chamber: This device is said to have protected her for ages and it bestows upon her powerful protective abilities. Its effects are included in her profile.

Greater Guiding Mastery: Friendly models containing Magnasaur in units within 12" of Anurarch Destined benefit from Pack Hunter.

Like the Tyrants of Old: Anurarch Destined is both General and Battle Standard Bearer.

In addition, an Army List containing Anurarch Destined cannot include any other Character, neither the Monolith of Vitalism nor a Koru Stone.

Utterly Ruthless: The first time each turn Anurarch Destined performs The Sacrifice and inflicts Health Point losses with it, she Recovers 1 HP.

— Shooting Weapons —

Storm Crystal: Shooting Weapon.

Name	Aim	Range	Shots	Str	AP	Attack Attributes
Storm Crystal	Auto	12"	D3+1	6	2	Automatic Hits, Lightning Attacks, March and Shoot, Unmodifiable

Shade and Stone

To learn anything about these two, I spoke at length with Whio, a vitalist missionary, who told me about the strength of the communal bonds of the Saurians, and how the greatest example of such a bond was Conjuring Shade and Fierce Stone Winding, commonly known as Shade and Stone. Two survivors whose union of both body and mind seems to personify the creed of Vitalism itself. Their meeting came during the scouring of Patareng island in 922 A.S., reportedly the only ones to make it off the island alive and unchained. Conjuring Shade's Druidism magic protected Fierce Stone Winding from wounds as she tore through the invading elves, while Fierce Stone Winding's shamanistic mysticism fueled Conjuring Shade to become a potent melee combatant, taking down lone ambushers in their rear, as the pair hastily made their way off the island, into the open seas.

After days drifting, they reached an uninhabited island. They dwelt there for years, forming a strong bond both to each other and to nature. The skink, with her proclivity for the healing forces of sun and water, tended their crops. The caiman, with her proclivity for violent forces of the wind and the waves, hunted on stormy nights, assailing prey both on land and off the shore. Together, they came to understand life not as a single current, but as a cycle of preservation and destruction. They came to realise that they both reflected a core tenet of Vitalism: Shielding alone will not stop the threats to life, merely hold them at bay. And simply attacking those threats will inevitably result in losing the life of the guardian. To succeed, both aspects must work as one.

Fierce Stone Winding and Conjuring Shade were eventually rescued by the saurian enclave of Krikalapore and given a new home. This is where their story was expected to end. As noted earlier, the communal bonds are strong with the Saurians, but the bond of these two had entwined their lives and their fate so thoroughly that they only shared this bond with each other, not the enclave at large. Though rescued, they continued living as if they still remained on their island. They became outsiders in their own home. Yet, they would soon find a new purpose, leaving their enclave and wandering the world to serve nature and become vitalist crusaders, volunteering wherever war threatened the balance of life. They have been sighted in jungles, on coastal plains, and even in the distant deserts of Taphria, always appearing together, moving as one.

Reports say that they navigate swiftly along friendly lines, aiding their kin in combat, both with their own teeth and claws, but also through magic. When they win their engagement, they move on to other parts of the line, where they are most needed. In practical terms, a commander may consider them ideal shock auxiliaries, able to navigate between larger units to find enemy flanks, as well as sustain themselves in longer engagements as they reinforce faltering lines.

There is poetry in their warfare. This makes them dangerous. Yet, like all zealots, their devotion may be turned against them. I advise clever use of troop positioning and feigned maneuvers to pull them in. Alone, they will be vulnerable and yours for the taking.

Shade and Stone

460 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 50×50 mm

Height 3

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	6"		8	Balance of Nature , Communal Bond, Disciplined, Harmony of the Sun , Light Troops, Solitary, Strider (Water Terrain)
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	5	5	5	4	Regeneration (5+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Conjuring Shade	3	4	4	1	5	Violence of the Storm , Tooth and Claw, Light Armour , Skink
Fierce Stone Winding	3	5	5	2	1	Tooth and Claw, Caiman , Light Armour

Model Rules

Balance of Nature: Wizard Conclave (3). Instead of the usual Spell Selection (including Spell Swapping), Shade and Stone must select one spell from Druidism Apprentice and Adept spells, one spell from Shamanism Apprentice and Adept spells, and must always select the Hereditary Spell.

Harmony of the Sun: All other friendly models in units within 8" of Shade and Stone benefit from Regeneration (+1, max. 4+).

Violence of the Storm: The Conjuring Shade model part is always considered affected by Awaken the Beast (Shamanism).

Sylvan Elves (SE)

Ancient Dawael, the World Tree,

The Sylvan Elves are allied with the mysterious treekin who live in the wildest forests. Intelligence about them is hard to find; the Trewi people are rarely met and hardly speak of their arboreal allies. However, there is one whose reputation has grown taller than even his stature and whose name is known in even far-off corners of the world. His name is Dawael and he is exceptionally well-travelled, even compared to non-arboreal creatures.

The few folk tales that mention his youth tell of Dawael's shrub stage during the Age of Iron, when he witnessed the murderous invasion of Wyscan by the Highborn and their dragons. The memory of the Trewi still resonates with treefathers and wyrms clashing amidst burning branches and mutilated elven corpses. The Arandai left a patch of devastated forest that the young tree soul would never forget. As Dawael grew, so did his determination. He would learn more about the terrors of the world so that he would be prepared, and spare his home the devastation he himself saw.

The axes and torches of orcs, dwarves and men tore at the roots of the Wyscan forest. Dawael survived, growing stronger with the passing centuries, yet each taking its toll in bark and sap, twigs and roots. Many treefathers succumbed to the invaders while defending their kin. To offset their dwindling numbers, the Emerald Queen called for reinforcements from the largely preserved forests of Taphria and Virentia. Dawael, now one of the most experienced treefathers, was sent as the Queen's ambassador to foreign jungles, swamps and taigas, to remind local powers that the gods have united vegetal and elven forces under their authority to repel aggressors together. Through his travels, he not only learned new skills from his kin, but also befriended many critters of the forests who would come to accompany him on his journeys.

Moreover, his experience in diplomacy sharpened Dawael's leadership, often training his new recruits in the ways of Sylvan warfare. Twenty-two years ago, he proved his worth in the sacred woods of Narrenwald that were suffering the foraging of the Beast Herds. Inspired by his travels, he taught the local Thickets Beasts how to shred the hooved ones hiding in ambush, ultimately winning the war of attrition. Nine years later, in central Taphria, he was sent to help the local forces put a halt to an invasion of gigantic herbivorous saurian behemoths, which were kept in check after a brief incursion of the Wild Hunt had reduced their numbers to a more manageable level.

Dawael is known for his rallying cry: "Wooders of the world, unite!". Indeed, his strength lies in his experience and adaptability. If the environment is cold and rigid, he'll seek to employ the tactics of the taigan trees. If warm and humid, he'll look instead to the trees of the jungle. Physically, Dawael is as imposing as any of his kin. Therein, too, lies his biggest weakness. Whether of Destria or any far-flung corner of the world, trees know one weakness above all: fire. Dawael has already been scarred by fire in battles past, most visible on the branches that make up his left arm, along with various grafts from all the continents he's visited. He will stand out among his kin as your primary target.

Ancient Dawael, the World Tree

600 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 75×50 mm

Height 5

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	5"		9	Fearless, Forest Dweller, Solitary, Strider (Forest), Stubborn, Sylvan Beasts ¹ , Terror, The World Tree , Tree Singing, Wizard Conclave (4)
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	6	4	7	4	Aegis (5+), Weakness (Flaming Attacks)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Ancient Dawael	3	4	5	2	2	Crush Attack, Impaling Roots, Magical Attacks, Stomp Attack (D6 hits), Sylvan Spirit

Model Rules

The World Tree: Ancient Dawael does not select his spells during list building, instead during Pre-game Selections, Ancient Dawael must select one of the following model rules with duration: Permanent. He also knows the associated forth spell.

- Colony of Frogs
- Murder of Crows
- Nest of Vipers

Wizard Conclave

The unit selects its spells from the following:

- Corruption of Tin (Alchemy) *
- Fountain of Youth (Druidism)
- Veil of Mist (Druidism)
- Chorus of the Damned (Evocation) *
- Illusory Paths (Witchcraft) †
- Forest Embrace (Hereditary Spell)

*Nest of Vipers only

*Colony of Frogs only

†Murder of Crows only

Optional Model Rules

Colony of Frogs: Add the following Offensive Model Part to Ancient Dawael:

Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Frog (6)	1	2	2	0	4	Toxic Attacks

Ancient Dawael gains Strider (Water Terrain).

One use only. Duration: One Turn. May be activated at the start of any Player Turn. Friendly units entirely with Sylvan Spirit within 12" of Ancient Dawael gain Immune (Flaming Attacks).

Murder of Crows: Add the following Offensive Model Part to Ancient Dawael:

Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Crow (6)	1	2	2	0	4	Afflict (-1 Combat Resolution)

Ancient Dawael gains Hatred (against Flying) and Afflict (-1 Def).

One use only. Duration: One Turn. May be activated at the start of any Player Turn. Choose an enemy unit within 24" of Ancient Dawael. All models with Fly in the chosen unit halve their Charge Range and Mobility, rounding fractions up.

Nest of Vipers: Add the following Offensive Model Part to Ancient Dawael:

Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Viper (6)	1	2	2	0	4	Poison Attacks

Ancient Dawael gains Immune (Poison Attacks).

One use only. Duration: One Turn. May be activated at the start of any Player Turn. Friendly units entirely with Sylvan Spirit within 12" of Ancient Dawael gain: 'Enemy units in contact with this unit lose Devastating Charge.'

Domethil, the Unicorn Shapeshifter

Few are familiar with shapeshifters. They are usually from noble origin, demonstrating not only excellent hunting skills, but also a strong spiritual affinity with a specific animal. Upon coming of age, they are summoned by a mentor and leave family and tribe, never to return. In the most remote places, they specialise in an animal that corresponds to their soul: bull or deer, swine or boar, bear or beaver, hound or wolf, lynx or ferret, swan or falcon, salmon or pike. After years of alternating between the teachings of the mentor and the companionship of the chosen animal, they are accepted by the animals as one of their own. From their mentor, they learn spells to alter their legs, head or torso. Once mastered, the spells last for a week or a fortnight. In their semi-animal shape, they gallop with their hooves, fly like birds, swim like fish, or track with their snouts. They explore every corner of the world, save for towns and villages, which they won't ever visit. They complement their deadly spears and swords with claws, fangs and antlers. The sole consolation their enemies may claim is that they are few in numbers.

Among the shapeshifters, Domethil is exceptional. As I learned from one of his relatives, he was a discreet but phenomenal hunter. At the age of seven, he captured a fox by surprise. At fourteen, he killed his first boar. At 21, he slew a gnasher. He hunted a grizzly alone at 28. A giant spider at 35. A kardakan at 42. He was a local legend before he came of age on his 49th birthday, when he was called to become a shapeshifter. For another 49 years, he was mentored by the old Master Tulmakortwut. When he re-emerged, he had achieved the unthinkable: he was the first elf ever to shapeshift into a unicorn. He took the name Domethil, which means "the Hoof of the Unicorn". Domethil's hooves are said to gallop faster than other shapeshifters. Moreover, they are so imbued with unicorn magic that bushes and shrubs grow in his steps.

Unicorns are notoriously elusive, said to live somewhere on the border of the Mortal and Immortal Realms; it is quite possible that Domethil travels likewise. Besides performing discreet long-range reconnaissance, he is known to have rescued Trewis surrounded by enemies, mist walking there and guiding his allies back to safety. His most famous exploit took place seventeen years ago, as reported by ogres. The local feral elves were contesting the Emerald Queen's rule. Sent as Her champion, Domethil challenged the Taiga Elves' mightiest shapeshifters. One after another, in the forms of karkadans, tigers, wolverines and yaks, Domethil is said to have bested them all. Now, the Taiga Elves pay homage to the Emerald Queen.

Should you ever cross paths with Domethil, consider that he has probably been stalking you for days, if not weeks. He is resistant to all forms of magic and exceedingly fast, relying on his speed and mighty charge to defeat his enemies. Resilient, on the other hand, he is not. As he moves alone, you may find use for your most accurate missile troops. Be wary, though, as they may only get one chance before finding themselves at the receiving end of the unicorn's fury.

Domethil, the Unicorn Shapeshifter

300 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	8"		9	Light Troops, Solitary, Strider, The Unicorn's Path , Vanguard
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	8	4	0	Aegis (5+), Magic Resistance (3), Resistance (against Magical Attacks)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Domethil	4	8	4	1	8	Weapon Master, The Unicorn's Fury , The Unicorn's Horn , Elf

Model Rules

The Unicorn's Fury: Melee Weapon.

Hand Weapon. Devastating Charge (+1 Str, +1 AP, and +X Att, where "X" is equal to the number of Ranks in a single enemy unit in contact, up to a maximum of 4.) and Divine Attacks

The Unicorn's Horn: Melee Weapon.

Spear. +1 Str, +1 AP

The Unicorn's Path: One use only. When initiating or ending a Move Manoeuvre in a friendly Movement Phase, Domethil can change a Fields, Ruins, or Water Terrain Feature he is in contact with to a Forest of the same size.

Undying Dynasties (UD)

Rehnepeh, the Undying Sun

It is not often one mistakes a chariot charge for divine intervention. But then, few undead lords make an entrance like Rehnepeh. Known to his followers as the Undying Sun, this ancient sovereign does not conceal his presence; he announces it.

While most Pharaohs remain bound to their tomb-cities, Rehnepeh has appeared more than once in distant lands. In each case, his arrival appears to coincide with the objectives of the Order of the Rising Sun, a supposed secret society of living Naptaans who have maintained the rites of the old gods and worked to influence the affairs of the living. Reports suggest that this order occasionally dispatches envoys to foreign courts, or even offers aid when interests align. Whether he commands the Order or merely answers its summons remains unclear. Regardless, his presence is an all too visible sign that the Order's negotiations have ended.

Rehnepeh was last sighted three years ago in the marshes west of Avras. There, his chariot host ambushed Equitanian knights, allowing the defector General Fontaine to secure victory and retain his governance of Avras. The alliance, such as it was, proved brief and unspoken. Fontaine, when questioned, merely observed: "It was a bright day." For the Equitanians, however, it was a grim one. A knight I later interviewed recounted that he had never faced might such as when the Charioteers of the Sun came roaring out of the bog.

Rehnepeh does not ride alone. He leads a unit of charioteers named for the celestial bodies of Napteshi cosmology:

*Hanatar, twin of the moon
Shunphar, the bright falcon
Shophmar, the shining eagle
Shulikreph, the silver vulture
Shunkwar, the jackal that pursues but never overtakes
Shatwilir, the hound on the hunt and Shunksep, the pale serpent glimpsed only at dusk*

Whether these names are ceremonial or mystical is unclear, but their movements in battle are tightly choreographed, as though echoing some greater pattern written in the sky. Moreover, Rehnepeh appears to draw strength from his charioteers, striking with otherworldly speed and precision. At Avras, witnesses claim he slew half a dozen knights in mere moments. Like many of his kind, he favours fast and decisive charges, ensuring his host never becomes bogged down in prolonged combat.

The key to his success may also lie in the Staff of Pi-Ankh-Khahiroth, a relic of such potency that it is said to part earth and sea alike with a towering column of flame, allowing Rehnepeh and his host to charge across mountains and chasms otherwise impassable. Though unexpected, such charges are never concealed. Rehnepeh's chariot itself blazes with unnatural brilliance, a wheeled idol in motion. They say mortal eyes struggle to behold it; his own warriors, long past the need for sight, suffer no such hindrance.

Despite his evident might, Rehnepeh seems to be biding his time somewhere beyond reliable report. Whether out of patience or caution, the Order of the Rising Sun appears to prefer working through influence and politics rather than open war. As you are well aware, such circumstances tend to prove fertile ground for mercenary involvement.

Rehnepeh, the Undying Sun

540 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 100×100 mm

Height 4

Global	Cha	Mob	Dis	Rsr	Model Rules
	8"	5"	9	1	Disciplined, Fearless, General, Staff of Pi-Ankh Khahiroth , Swiftstride, The Golden Chariot , Undead, Unstable
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	6	6	5	3	Regeneration (5+), Resistance (Flaming Attacks), Shield
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Rehnepeh	4	6	5	2	3	Charioteer of the Sun , Light Armour , Skeleton
Skeletal Horse (4)	1	2	3	0	2	Grind Attack (1 hit), Mount
Chassis			5	2		Impact Hits (2D3+3 hits), Construct

Model Rules

Charioteer of the Sun: During 'Check Combat Formations' (Round of Combat, 2.A), the Rehnepeh model part gains a bonus to its Att, Off, Str, AP, and Agi equal to half the number of Rank-and-File Skeleton Chariot models in his unit, rounding fractions up.

Staff of Pi-Ankh Khahiroth: A unit containing the Staff of Pi-Ankh Khahiroth benefits from Ghost Step and Strider. In addition, all attacks made by model parts with Mount benefit from Flaming Attacks and Magical Attacks.

The Golden Chariot: Rehnepeh gains Beacon of Courage (12") and Distracting. In addition, a unit containing The Golden Chariot can never benefit from Cover.

Ashotet, Custodian of Souls

All Napteshi postpone their post-mortem transit to Thewat until the long-anticipated time when the Napteshi civil war will end. Most souls contribute eagerly to the host. However, some are too stained to be trusted with animating a body, either because of some heinous action they committed during their life, or because their minds have degraded beyond sanity with the passing centuries. These desperate souls have nowhere to die, and for their victims, the memories of their crimes don't fade with time. As the numbers of sinners increase inexorably, they are gathered until the end of eternity in the grim pyramid of Haratephar. The pyramid itself, constructed of black stone etched with countless sigils, rises silently from the calm banks of River Napaat. It is said that the winds whisper the names of the condemned, and even the river bends subtly around its base in the otherwise calm and silent district. The pyramid is overseen by a priestess with the title "Custodian of Souls". One such custodian was Priestess Ashotet.

In 938 A.S., dwarven pilgrims and seekers were transiting along River Napaat from Vetia to Kegiz Gavem, as they do every year under the cover of a three-thousand-year-old agreement. This particular year, their drunken curiosity got the better of them as they proceeded to climb the pyramid, looking for a fight. This eventually led to the so-called "Seekers and Skeletons" conflict, which is well documented. What is not, however, is Priestess Ashotet's role in that same conflict.

Standing mostly unprotected and confronted with the dwarven sacrilege of that first night, Ashotet resorted to a forbidden ritual. She summoned the vilest of souls from her vault and set them loose upon the intruders. Those faint of heart quickly succumbed, while the rest fled back to whence they came. While effective, the unleashed spirits proved difficult to contain, some wandering the riverlands for weeks before Ashotet could bind them to her. As the dwarves returned and battles raged, Ashotet joined the fray. As a priestess focused on spellcasting, her melee abilities are limited, and so she came to rely on her spirits in combat, and their bond grew stronger as the conflict continued. After peace was eventually reached, Ashotet found that the spirits she had wielded would not be returned to the pyramid; they had bound to her in perpetuity.

While Queen Teput commended her decisive actions under duress, the ritual was forbidden for a reason. Mingling with such twisted souls will inevitably make her one of them as they gnaw on her sanity. As such, not only would she be banished from the pyramid of Haratephar, but from the Queen's service altogether. She now wanders the world with her "sinister party," a term commonly used by locals I've spoken with who survived her interventions. To the eyes of the Napteshi, it seems that she is not so much a hero as a living curse, directed - one hopes - at the proper target.

As you're well aware, evil spirits are not uncommon in the more twisted arsenal of the undying dynasties; but these seem to be particularly dangerous and unpredictable. Should you encounter Ashotet, negotiation may not be an option. Steel your spirit and stay true to your faith. The pious shall triumph unscathed.

Ashotet, Custodian of Souls

650 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 60×100 mm

Height 3

Global	Cha / Mob	Dis	Rsr	Model Rules
	4"	7	1	Assailed Sanity , Death is Only the Beginning, Exclusive (Tormented Souls), Fearless, General, Ghost Step, Horror, Light Troops, Soul Conduit, The Lost and Damned , The Pyramidion , Undead, Unstable, War Platform
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	5	3	4	0	Aegis (5+, against Magical Attacks)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Ashotet	1	3	3	1	2	Hatred, Magical Attacks, Hierophant , Skeleton
Spectral Guard (6)	1	3	3	1	2	Hatred, Magical Attacks, Spirit

Wizard Conclave

Assailed Sanity: Ashotet is a Wizard that knows all 6 Spells from Evocation, cannot Hereditary Swap, and has Channel (3).

- Whispers of the Veil (Evocation)
- Danse Macabre (Evocation)
- Chorus of the Damned (Evocation)
- Touch of the Reaper (Evocation)
- Spectral Blades (Evocation)
- Soul Blight (Evocation)

Model Rules

Assailed Sanity: Once per turn, when she fails a Casting Roll for a Learned Spell using three or more Magic Dice, she can reroll the dice. If this reroll contains a double, she suffers a Miscast (equal to the Casting Roll as normal). Note that this applies even if the spell fails or is Dispelled, and that she only suffers a single Miscast per casting.

The Lost and Damned: In an Army List containing Ashotet, Skeleton Warriors and Skeleton Cavalry gain Tormented Souls.

In addition, neither of the following unit entries may be included: Death Cult Hierarchy, Casket of Phatep, Rehnepeh the Undying Sun, nor any model with Undying Will.

The Pyramidion: Spells cast by Ashotet gain +6" Range.

In addition, Ashotet can cast a unique Bound Spell (6+):

Surge of Mad Spirits: Range: 24"; Type: Hex, Damage; Duration: Instant.

The target must take a Courage Test rolling an additional D6. If failed, it suffers a number of hits equal to the amount by which the test was failed. Those hits wound automatically and have Armour Penetration 10."

Tormented Souls: The model gains Aegis (5+, against non-Magical Attacks), and gain Innate Weapons, and Skeleton and its Resurrected value is halved.

All model parts gain +1 AP, Exclusive (Ashotet Custodian Of Souls), Ghost Step, Horror, Unruly and Spirit.

The model's Armour is set to 0, Hatred and Magical Attacks, it loses Shield, lose all their Weapons,

Vampire Covenant (VC)

Lady Chrysélie

Vampires are masters of concealment. Many an inquisitor has spent months identifying and tracking a target, only to have it vanish without a trace, leaving them to question whether they were even on the trail to begin with. Unsuspected by those in charge, but progressively revealed by my research, Lady Chrysélie belongs to a rare breed of vampires: she is flamboyant.

She was once the baroness of Roquecombe, in southern Equitaine. She abhorred her role in a society where daughters were married to seal alliances, and wives served merely as a mark of prestige. In this feudal world governed by a strict hierarchy, her only friend was Mistress Teissandiera, a rare woman of power and a member of the Weavers Guild. Encouraged by her, Lady Chrysélie devoted herself to learning fencing techniques, improving rapidly as she sparred with the baron's guards. This unladylike behaviour was more than her husband would tolerate and he ordered her to resume her expected position. Instead, she challenged him to a formal duel and killed him. Now legally emancipated, she found herself socially isolated like never before. At this time, she recruited a small private army, intended primarily to serve the interests of her wealthy bourgeois friend, and the two widows increasingly threatened the dominance of the noble men in the region.

After a tip from a source inside the Weavers Guild, Mistress Teissandiera was eventually found and it was revealed that she was a vampire. After a long struggle involving two dozen men, she was subdued, interrogated and eventually, the unrecognizable remains of her body were burned. Witnessing her trial, Lady Chrysélie declared "Only now am I truly free". None of the judges noticed anything suspicious and she went back home unbothered. However, my interpretation is that the chains of her former husband, which she so desperately sought broken, turned out to merely be replaced by those of Mistress Teissandiera, abiding by the strict codes of the Vampire Covenant.

Lady Chrysélie has now renounced all traditional social roles. She commands a band of dark and mutinous mercenaries, known for their mad, bloodthirsty fury. Their stronghold, of nasty reputation, is located on top of a hill a few leagues from Roquecombe, where the rare visitor receives a frosty reception before being politely turned away. She accepts contracts against nobles or merchants, Equitan or foreign. This behaviour in plain sight is most unusual for a vampire. My suspicion is that since she's alone and has no connection to the Covenant, the night lords are quite satisfied with her presence as a distraction from their own schemes.

None of that makes her any less dangerous. Chrysélie is bold and aggressive, seeking conflict seemingly for its own sake. She savours each fight down to the last drop of blood, which she licks off her rapiers with relish. She seems poised to live a short life of a reckless warrior, trying her luck which has not disappointed her to date. Such ambitions are notable, yet rife for exploitation. You may well hire Lady Chrysélie as a subcontractor, knowing she will do her utmost to eliminate her target with as much bloodletting as possible. And should she be sent into the hands of the Inquisition, you'll conveniently save yourself a rival.

Lady Chrysélie

330 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob	Dis	Rsr	Model Rules
	6"	8	1	Autonomous, Fearless, Gates of the Netherworld, General, Sangreal , The Dead Arise , Undead, Unstable
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	3	6	4	2	Distracting (1)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi
					Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Lady Chrysélie	4	6	5	2	6
					Dance of Death , Unholy Appetite , Thirsty Rapiers , Vampire

Model Rules

Dance of Death: For every Health Point Lady Chrysélie inflicts with a Standard Melee Attack:

- Immediately roll another Standard Melee Attack allocated at the same Health Pool as the initial attack.
- Resolve these attacks before removing any casualties.
- These new attacks do not generate any further attacks.

Sangreal: The bearer gains +1 Arm and the model part with Vampire gains Fury.

The Dead Arise: The model can cast The Dead Arise as a Bound Spell (5+).

The Dead Arise: Range: 12", Type: Ground, Duration: Instant.

Summon a Skeletons or Zombies unit. Declare which when selecting the target. The unit has a number of Health Points corresponding to its Rsr. All upgrades except Command Group Options are allowed. Note: all models must be placed within the spell's Range, with at least one model touching the target point.

Thirsty Rapiers: Paired Weapons. Lethal Strike. For every Health Point loss dealt with this Weapon, immediately roll a D6: on 5+, Lady Chrysélie Recovers a single Health Point. However, all Vampiric rolls she makes automatically fail.

Unholy Appetite: After a Round of Combat in which at least one attack with Unholy Appetite caused any HP loss, all attacks from the same unit with Unholy Appetite gain Hatred until the end of the next Player Turn.

The Collective of Varyag the Sainted

There once lived a famous preacher whose words drew pilgrims from all of eastern Vetia. His name was Varyag "the Sainted", by those foolish enough to disregard the Church's authority. Varyag was a pacifist and his message was one of love unbound by creed or law. "Life," he once said, "is its own sanctity".

His death was neither glorious nor mysterious. A stray arrow from an inexperienced hunter ended him before he reached his fortieth year. But the tragedy lay not in his passing, rather in the devotion of those who could not accept it. Thirteen of his disciples gathered to perform a necromantic ritual. The disciples were inexperienced and their magic crude. They lost control of their spell. The backlash from beyond the Veil twisted flesh, bone and mind. The result was nothing but an unliving monstrosity.

My source - the hunter that felled Varyag - was the only witness to this event and the key to understanding the creature I've come to call 'The Collective of Varyag': a writhing amalgam of limbs, faces, and voices. The mind at its center apparently considers itself still to be Varyag, but fragmented, both shattered and reshaped by the trauma and the souls of his followers.

Varyag's message of peace survived, though profoundly warped. It would seek to pierce into the soul of the living and take those who were found to spread malice, adding their bodies to its own bulk to further Varyag's cause in death, but sparing the innocent. As such, children often survive visits from The Collective, further spreading the tales of a vast shadow engulfing entire villages.

Gaining any further knowledge has been most difficult. My sources familiar with the Inquisition tell me that attempts to hunt the creature have been futile. It appears seldom, in different regions and it never lingers. It would not surprise me if the creature is hidden by sinister agents. In military accounts, a strange giant has been seen fighting alongside troops assessed to belong to the Vampire Covenant, notable not only for its strange shape but also its powerful necromantic abilities. I can only deduce that this being and The Collective are the very same.

Commanders report that its mere presence seems to stir the dead to motion and that even for the undead, the creature is very difficult to harm, as it adds the bodies of the fallen to its twisted, bloated form. More puzzling is the fact that repeat encounters with the same undead forces have reported no sight of the creature. It may be that once it considers its unholy work done, it simply wanders off, its mind like its body, clouded and confusing. For all the horror this creature has unleashed, it's also rather pitiful. Misguided piety has cursed these poor souls to wander the roads, trapped in a coffin of its own tortured voices, between faith and blood.

Unfortunately, I have been unable to uncover more about this elusive being with the funds provided, although I do have promising leads for future research. And while there is more to uncover, one thing is for certain: there is no reasoning with this creature and with your career in mind, it is sure to find you guilty. I would advise mental fortitude, adequate arms and averting your gaze from its dead eyes.

The Collective of Varyag the Sainted

600 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 100×150 mm

Height 5

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Rsr	Model Rules
	7"		8	1	Autonomous, Awaken (Skeletons, Zombies), Coven of Skulls, Ever Growing , Fearless, Gates of the Netherworld, Horror, Solitary, Terror, Undead, Unstable, Wizard Master
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	8	3	5	1	Regeneration (4+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Varyag	5	3	5	2	3	Stomp Attack (D6 hits), Cacophony of Suffering , Greater Lich

— Magic Options —

pts —

Evocation

— Model Rules —

Coven of Skulls: When the Collective of Varyag casts Arise! (Hereditary Spell), they may choose to set the spell's Range to 6" and give it the Type: Aura. This choice is declared when choosing targets.

Ever Growing: Whenever the Collective of Varyag is the target of Arise! (Hereditary Spell), they can Raise Health Points above their number of starting Health Points, to a maximum of twice their starting Health Points.

— Shooting Weapons —

Cacophony of Suffering: Shooting Weapon.

Name	Aim	Range	Shots	Str	AP	Attack Attributes
Cacophony of Suffering	X+	12"	*HP/2	*	10	* To-wound-rolls are set to 5+, Automatic Hits, * Half of Varyag's HP, rounded up, March and Shoot, Stand and Shoot, Unmodifiable

Vermin Swarm (VS)

Professor Mauss

This next entry is a lesson in skepticism, and a reminder that certain peoples of this world cannot always be trusted. I paid good money for these sources and they claim that eight years ago, House Rakachit sent their most senior engineer and inventor to infiltrate the Eichtal Inventive Academy. The infiltrator was discovered by Professor Mauss, a senior researcher and scholar, whom the rat managed to kill. Through sheer happenstance he managed to convince other professors who heard the scuffle that all was well. During the next few days, the infiltrator pored over Mauss' notes in peace, posing as a busy Mauss. Eventually, this became a full time occupation for the rat who took the name Mauss himself and has since taken it upon himself to spread misinformation about the vermin threat among the upper echelons of Sonnstähler academia while gathering research for his own projects.

This is, quite simply, a preposterous lie. Little do these sources know that Mauss and I are old peers, having studied together in the University of Santa Regina and we still correspond to this day. Professor Mauss was the victim of a tragic plague, causing blisters to appear on his skin in addition to a chronic cough, so he now wears gloves and a mask. Despite this, he still holds tenure at Eichtal and even holds occasional lectures! And this is the man whose name my sources seek to tarnish? They even suggest that Mauss was involved in - nay, orchestrated - the infamous Steam Tank Heist of 959 A.S.

What I have been able to establish through my own research, is that there is a vermin inventor who calls himself Mauss, clearly in an attempt to ape my associate, known across Vetia for his engineering research. Vermin are ever the cheap imitators of man, after all. That being said, the rat called Mauss is said to be the inventor of their bizarre lighting cannon that in recent years has become a staple of vermin artillery. Furthermore, I'm told that this rat has modified a Steam Tank with vermin technology, creating a true engineering marvel; or monstrosity.

This inventor is supposedly also a talented chemist who has created a strange gas named inergon, which is said to protect the coils and wires of the tank's darkstone engine. Since safety is not a concern of the vermin kind, it's being used to enable an overdrive mechanic. The machine is so complex that only he himself is able to drive it, which is perhaps his greatest achievement: making himself indispensable in a twisted society where life is held in little regard.

When he has been spotted on the battlefield, he's been well protected atop his steel behemoth, laughing maniacally as he unleashes his invention upon the enemy. Facing this monstrosity in battle seems no easy task but as with all vermin, power gets to their head and they think themselves invincible. Disciplined units of sufficient numbers have turned out to be a problem for the Imperial Steam Tanks in the past, if they are unsupported. This knock-off should prove no different.

I will send word to my good friend Professor Mauss and tell him of this farce, so that he can anticipate with joy the day you take this rat's head.

Professor Mauss

540 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 60×100 mm

Height 5

The unit counts towards 'Bread and Games'.

Professor Mauss counts towards Tunnel Gunners, at a ratio of 1:8 (one unit with the weapon or rule counts eight times towards the limit)

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	2D6"		7	Beacon of Courage (6"), Fearless, Inergon injection! , Random Movement (2D6"), Solitary, Stubborn, Superior Darkstone Power , Terror, Unstable
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	8	1	8	4
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Professor Mauss	3	4	4	1	5	Maniacal Enthusiasm (To-hit roll), Rotary Gun (3+), Vermin
Chassis			5	2	2	Devastating Charge (+1 Str, +1 AP, +10 Agi), Grind Attack (3D3 hits, Lightning Attacks), Prototype Mauss Rifle (4+) , Construct, Metal Armour

Model Rules

Inergon injection!: One use only. Duration: One Phase.

In the Movement Phase, before moving, Professor Mauss can gain Random Movement (3D6").

Superior Darkstone Power: Professor Mauss can choose not to move despite having Random Movement.

The model cannot choose to Pursue, unless it is its First Round of Combat and it is Charging. In that case, it must Pursue (including Overrun).

Shooting Weapons

Prototype Mauss Rifle: Shooting Weapon.

Name	Aim	Range	Shots	Str	AP	Attack Attributes
Prototype Mauss Rifle	4+	36"	1	5	2	Area Attack (1×3), Artillery, Direct Hit (Str 10, AP 4, Multiple Wounds (D3+1)), Lightning Attacks, Maniacal Enthusiasm (To-hit roll)

The Shadowslice Stalker

Known in whispers of Under-Avras as the Shadowslice Stalker, this legendary assassin is said to have supernatural powers, turning into shadows and smoke. One for whom no burrow is impenetrable, and who never leaves as much as a trace. Tall tales, and as often with the vermin, full of deceit. The information I present here was neither easy nor cheap to acquire, and is known only to those in the Dusk Senate. The Shadowslice Stalker - the legend - is but a facade. But behind the mask lies another just as interesting pest: an assassin and an artist, signing her masterpiece with bloodied daggers.

According to my sources, her beginnings were humble: a young apprentice, scolded by her mentor and peers alike for “unratlike” pursuits; painting, sculpting, even theatrics. It was these very “failings,” however, that became her triumph. With subtlety and cunning, she engineered her own master’s demise, a performance so delicate in execution yet so clear in authorship that the Dusk Senate had little choice but to accept her into its ranks. From that moment, she walked a fine line between admired and despised, her eccentricity keeping her ever at arm’s length from her fellows. And so, she adopted the mantle of the Shadowslice Stalker, a legendary assassin of old.

It seems that in her early days, she was called to defend nearby cities bound to Under-Avras against threats from the world above. She was not expected to survive. Yet with each slain foe, she became stronger and quickly learned to adapt her technique to suit the abilities and shortcomings of her foes. Her true trial of fire came in the form of a rival Dread Elf assassin who was sent to the same battlefield. Despite the elf striking first, the duel ended as fast as it had begun with his own poisoned blade jammed firmly between his ribs.

The Stalker is not only a talented duelist, as you would expect from any assassin, vermin or not. Her most unusual weapon is disguise. Her artistic ambitions quickly saw her creating prosthetics of wax and resin, fur tinted with careful strokes of pigment, and poring over old Avrasian theatre books; she even became adept at mimicry of posture and body language. Given time, she’s capable of posing as anyone: a priest, a legate, even a senator. Such impersonations would founder, of course, on account of her scent. Female musk is rare in the ranks of the vermin rulers. To counter this, she began crafting a library of scented paints, effective enough to fool even the praetorian brute bodyguards.

Once she’s in striking distance, though, the Stalker employs more familiar tools such as venoms, garrottes, and daggers. And just like her peers, she’s fast and excels in exploiting weaknesses. Furthermore, it seems that she has also managed to acquire more exotic prototype weapons from some of her targets. This arsenal of weapons makes her a deadly threat as is, but it’s her ability to vanish into smoke that is truly remarkable. How one catches such a foe, I do not yet know. What’s worse, should you face her on the battlefield, chances are you won’t know it until it’s too late. However, in vermin society, great power comes with greater risk. There are many who would seek to eliminate her, given the opportunity...

The Shadowslice Stalker

280 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 20×20 mm

Height 1

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	6"		6	Callous, Disorienting Scent , Hidden, Light Troops
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	2	4	3	0	Distracting, Mistress of Smoke
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Shadowslice	3	5	4	3	8	Divine Attacks, Hatred (against Characters), Multiple Wounds (2, against Characters), Poison Attacks, Shadowslice's Panoply , Vermin

Model Rules

Disorienting Scent: Afflict (–2 Off), against model parts with Beast or Magnasaur.

Mistress of Smoke: One use only.

When the The Shadowslice Stalker would be removed as a casualty or flee while joined to a unit, remove her from the Battlefield: she becomes Hidden again. If she uses this ability and hasn't been removed as a casualty at the end of the game, the opponent still receives Victory Points as if she had been removed as a casualty.

Shadowslice's Panoply: The Shadowslice Stalker is equipped with the most advanced selection of murderous weaponry known to any species. Each time the Stalker is Deployed using Hidden, she gains one of the following Magic Items. Duration: Permanent. This effect ends when The Shadowslice Stalker becomes Hidden.

- Countless Daggers: First Strike (+2 Att), Paired Weapons and Throwing Weapons (2+).
- Darkstone Rod: +2 Str, Lightning Attacks and Multiple Wounds (2)
- Senator's Toga: +2 Dis, Commanding Presence (6)

Warriors of the Dark Gods (WDG)

Joulgrim, the Giving

Stormskar is but a windswept rock in the middle of an icy ocean to the far north. A now exhausted gold mine gave the frozen island some minuscule value in the eyes of the outside world. For the inhabitants, however, that mine was worth one's soul. Humans and dwarves alike had fallen to Sugulag in the struggle over that mine before Joulgrim was even born.

As a rising champion of Greed, he distinguished himself not only in combat but also strategy. It was he who steered the raiding parties past garrisons and reefs to new shorelines ripe for plunder. Amidst these further raids, it was also he who fell from his path.

In a raid upon Reusmund, it is said Joulgrim saw a man who moved his heart. Count Wilhelm, often referred to as "the Wise" in local records, led the Reusmund defense. Rather than escaping with his own belongings, he distributed them among the soldiers; theirs to keep should they successfully defend the city. Not only did they manage to beat back Joulgrim's band, but the count's estate was left largely untouched. By giving to others, Wilhelm had mustered the strength to defend what was his.

Joulgrim came to the conclusion that greed need not be for one's self alone. Paradoxically, he thought that greed could be even stronger when shared. Upon his return to Stormskar, Joulgrim organised a gift of food and riches from their plunder to his people. This greatly disappointed Sugulag and angered his peers. Exiled from both his god and his people, he was forced to swim into the cold waters until taken by the sea. Yet through some divine prank, he was not. He was given a second chance by Father Chaos, who bade him to preach his new convictions.

Arriving in Åskland, he began speaking of generosity and strength, a snare for the selfish warriors of darkness and a lure for those who had not yet thrown in with their lot. Then, he began his war. The rich hold of Nevaz Lokoz had cast out the dwarves of Stormskar generations before, and they bore the brunt of the assault. Renegades, rebels and covetous fools banded together to despoil a hold that had stood since the Old Empire; and they emerged triumphant. Joulgrim ritually rewarded every last freebooter, loyalist and sellsword he had convinced to aid with treasures taken from their makers; and he became legend, ascending into the arms of the Dark Father before their very eyes.

To this day, on the anniversary of his ascension, it is customary in that part of the world to leave an offering to Joulgrim: small, symbolic gifts to ward away the destroyer of cities. Or, perhaps, honour him. Regardless, these people would do well to hope their superstition holds some form of power, for unless all my records prove false, Joulgrim has returned.

Sitting atop a daemonic throne, he not only commands his warriors but grants them divine gifts from the Immortal Realm. I spoke with an experienced general who described to me how unpredictable Joulgrim's armies become as they temporarily take the shape of the daemonic. To beat this foe, you must remain flexible and focus your efforts on taking on the Giving himself. Fighting an Exalted Herald can never be recommended but as with all warfare, it is a matter of necessity.

Joulgrim, the Giving

600 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 50×100 mm

Height 4

Joulgrim, the Giving counts towards Legendary Beasts, at a ratio of 1:3 (one unit with the weapon or rule counts three times towards the limit)

Global	Cha	Mob	Dis	Model Rules
	10"	5"	9	Courageous, Disciplined, Fearless, Fly, General, Light Troops, Solitary, Strider (Water Terrain), Supernal, Swiftstride, The Father's Gifts
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	6	8	5	3	Aegis (4+)
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Joulgrim, the Giving	6	9	5	2	8	Magical Attacks, Memory of a Hoarded Blade , Daemon
Hellsteed (2)	1	3	3	0	3	Magical Attacks, Mount
Chassis			4	3		Impact Hits (2D3 hits), Construct

Model Rules

Memory of a Hoarded Blade: If included in an Army List not containing Favour of Greed, Joulgrim gains +2 Str, +2 AP and always strikes at Agility Step 0.

The Father's Gifts: At the beginning of each friendly Player Turn, Joulgrim can choose a single friendly unit within 12" to gain one of the following abilities, with Duration: One Turn.

- Supernal Shield: the chosen unit suffers -3 Arm and gains Aegis (5+).
- Unholy Edge: the chosen unit always strikes at Agility Step 0 and gains +1 AP.
- The Eight-Point Crown: the chosen unit suffers -1 Str and -1 AP, and gains Stubborn and Unstable.

Mraven, the Chimerical

It is common to attribute to Volskayans the strength of the mighty cave bear, the alertness of the snow eagle or the tenacity of the timber wolf. When it comes to Mraven, these characteristics can be taken somewhat more literally: Mraven is all of them simultaneously, and much more.

According to my sources, Mraven was a gifted hedonist of Cibaresh some ten years past; a roving rake who preached the word of their deity who had granted his follower a most unusual gift: Mraven could change form at will. Sometimes appearing as a man, sometimes as a woman and sometimes even as beasts.

They were constantly on the move, travelling to avoid inquisitors. While stopping near Voynich to preach, Mraven was approached by a pair of siblings, a young maiden and her brother. They begged the stranger to save their village from an imminent attack by a warherd that had been spotted as it emerged from the Bog of Beasts. Mraven was reported to have smiled gently and assured them that Cibaresh's favour would set them free. For the next week, he stayed with the siblings, as the village prepared for battle. During this time, Mraven's bond to the siblings became strong and the shapeshifter's motivations to defend the village became personal.

During the ensuing battle, their creativity and viciousness became legend. Arrghraghk the Earthshaker, a titanic beast who was the pride and joy of the diminutive yet arrogant enemy commander, perished fighting Mraven in a grotesque shape, merging bear, wolf and human alike, before they harried the remnants as a blood-stained eagle rivalling chimerae in size

As expected, the entire village was lost to the seduction of the dark god Cibaresh. What was not expected was that Mraven too was lost. They abandoned sin for love, found with the siblings. Heretical as that form of love may be, any semblance of good emotions earned Mraven the spite of dread Cibaresh. The God could not take back his gift of shapeshifting, yet cruel as he is, chose to amplify it, cursing Mraven to shift and writhe endlessly, unable to keep their pleasing shapes intact.

For many who seek to walk the Path of the Favoured, being cast aside is truly the end. Yet some may yet find "salvation" from the Dark Father. He alone could spare the exiled and prevent them from becoming Forsaken. Given Mraven's current form, however, you'd be forgiven for mistaking them for such a beast. That being said, it would seem that the Father has heard Mraven's call for redemption and granted them some control over their twisted body. Reports state that they now wage war upon all things sacred, under the banner of the Dark Gods, following the orders of generals who can promise them redemption in the eyes of the Father. In combat, they are quite adept at changing their form to gain an advantage over the enemy. Reports speak of the Doomlord taking the form of a disfigured Yeti, a twisted Hydra and even a debauched Gortach.

Still, no matter the shape, Mraven is of mortal flesh. As with any monster, you must steel your men and ready your cannons. As they are able to change shape to adapt, an assault of combined arms should prove effective.

Mraven, the Chimerical

460 pts

Single model

Rarity: Legendary

Base 40×40 mm

Height 3

Mraven, the Chimerical counts towards Legendary Beasts, at a ratio of 1:2 (one unit with the weapon or rule counts twice towards the limit)

Global	Cha / Mob		Dis	Model Rules
	6"		9	Cibaresh's Curse , Courageous, Dying Blow, Exclusive (Path of the Exiled, Human), Fearless, Light Troops
Defensive	HP	Def	Res	Arm
	4	6	5	4	Hell-Forged Armour, Shield
Offensive	Att	Off	Str	AP	Agi	Attack Attributes, Weapons and Properties
Mraven	5	7	5	2	5	Hand-and-a-Half, Smother (2) , Great Weapon, Metal Armour, Path of the Exiled

Model Rules

Cibaresh's Curse: At the start of your turn, choose one of the following options. Mraven gains that rule with Duration: One Turn. You cannot choose the same option twice in a row.

- False Hydra: Mraven gains Breath Attack (Str 3, AP 1), Rage, and Regeneration (4+).
- Giant Yeti: Mraven sets his Height to 5, gains +1 Res, and Stomp Attack (D6 hits) and Touch of Frost.
- Wasteland Spearback: Mraven gains Channel (1), and the following shooting weapon:

Name	Aim	Range	Shots	Str	AP	Attack Attributes
Shoot Spikes	3+	12"	2D3+2	5	2	March and Shoot

- Debauched Gortach: Mraven gains Hatred, Lethal Strike, Strength from Flesh.

Smother (X): Melee Attacks towards a model with Height X gain +1 to hit and +1 to wound.

Optional Model Rules

Strength from Flesh: Standard Melee Attacks that roll a '6' to wound gain Multiple Wounds (D3).

If at least one such attack causes an HP loss, this model Recovers 1 HP at the end of the Agility Step (unless it was removed as a casualty).

Touch of Frost: An enemy unit suffers -1 Agi (to a minimum of 1) for each unit containing Touch of Frost it is in contact with.

Epilogue

As I pore over endless notes and records, one thing has become increasingly clear: the world is becoming more dangerous and unpredictable.

Old certainties crumble. Borders once thought stable now shift beneath marching feet, and powers believed dormant once more step onto the stages of history. The names collected in these pages are not mere curiosities. They are answers - some forged in faith, others in cruelty - to a world that no longer tolerates passivity.

What unites these figures is resolve. Each chose action when restraint would have been safer. Some did so to preserve what remained; others to seize what they believed was owed to them. In doing so, they have bent the course of battles, unsettled kingdoms, and reminded us that the fate of nations is often decided not by councils, but by those willing to stand at the tip of a spear.

May these accounts serve you well, not as warnings, but as invitations to challenge destiny and become one among the legends.

Ludovico della Scafa, Professore Emerito dell'Accademia di Charivaria. 961 A.S.